

Class FR 4534.

Book .26

1700

COPYRIGHT DEPOSIT

4233

767

32

THOMAS DE QUINCEY.

THE CONFESSIONS OF
AN ENGLISH OPIUM-EATER

Being an Extract from the Life of a Scholar

BY
THOMAS DE QUINCEY

(Reprinted from The London Magazine for September and October, 1821, and December, 1822)

EDITED WITH INTRODUCTION AND NOTES

BY

ARTHUR BEATTY, PH.D.

INSTRUCTOR IN ENGLISH IN THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN

*Choice word and measured phrase, above the reach
Of ordinary men; a stately speech.*

New York
THE MACMILLAN COMPANY

LONDON: MACMILLAN & CO., LTD.

1900

All rights reserved

TWO COPIES RECEIVED,

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
Office of the

APR 12 1900

Register of Copyrights

PR 4534
C6
1900

56710

COPYRIGHT, 1900,

By THE MACMILLAN COMPANY.

*9366

SECOND COPY,

9366

Apr. 12.
1900.

Norwood Press

J. S. Cushing & Co. - Berwick & Smith
Norwood Mass. U.S.A.

to maintain himself during a tramp in the Welsh mountains. He wandered about Wales from July to November, 1802, keeping up a correspondence with his friends at first; but later he cut himself off from them completely, thus depriving himself of his allowance from home, which had been granted on condition of his keeping his friends informed of his whereabouts. His vagrancy began in Wales, and in November, 1802, he "took that wonderful plunge into London" (to use Masson's words); and now began that all-important period of his vagrancy — his life in London. He himself calls this episode an "impassioned parenthesis" in his life; and such, indeed, it is, for the sufferings he now endured, united with those endured in Wales, caused the disorders which led to the taking of opium, with all the amazing consequences. The events of this period are all told in the Confessions with such delicacy and candor that nothing more can be added.

By some means a way was opened for a return to his friends, and in the autumn of 1803 we find him duly entered as a student at Worcester College, Oxford. Here he remained for four years, practically unknown, but busily engaged in reading all manner of books, especially those of English literature. It was during this period that he learned the use of opium, on one of his frequent visits to London, in 1804. Just before graduation he suddenly left the University, because his great shyness led him to fear the oral examinations, despite the fact that he had passed most brilliant written ones.

Next year, 1808, we find him in London, ostensibly studying law, but in reality carrying on his reading over still greater ranges of literature and science, and making the acquaintance of many of the leading literary men of the day. Such was his faith in Coleridge, that, soon after he made his acquaintance, he gave him £300, through Cottle, Coleridge's publisher. At this time began his acquaintance with Charles Lamb, which later ripened into intimacy. Through Coleridge he also met Wordsworth, with whom he had been carrying on a correspondence from the earliest years of his university course.

In 1809, as a result of this meeting, De Quincey went to live at Grasmere, in order that he might be near Wordsworth. Here he lived his bachelor life until 1816, when he married Margaret Simpson, the daughter of a "statesman," or hereditary farmer, of Westmoreland. He remained in Grasmere until 1821, engaged in his extensive reading, in writing for the Westmoreland Gazette, Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine, the Quarterly Review, and in editing the Westmoreland Gazette for a year. In spite of the fact that his writing brought him in considerable income, his extravagant habits consumed this, together with the somewhat large inheritance from his father; and he began to feel the pinch of want. So, in the year 1820, he went down to London to seek for literary opportunities, and was fortunate enough to secure an introduction to Taylor and Hessey, the publishers of the London Magazine, the most important London periodical at that time. As a result of this introduction there appeared, in the September and October numbers for 1821, a long, anonymous article in two parts, entitled The Confessions of an English Opium-Eater: Being an Extract from the Life of a Scholar. The greatest interest was aroused; De Quincey's career was determined; and from this time forward his energies expressed themselves almost exclusively in contributions to the magazines.

He soon returned to his wife and family in Grasmere, and continued to live there until 1828, when he went to Edinburgh in search of a wider literary field than was afforded him by the Lake district. Edinburgh was well known to him, as were many of the leading literary lights of the northern capital, since he had visited that city in the winter of 1814-1815, for the purpose of visiting John Wilson, better known in literature as Christopher North, with whom De Quincey had been made acquainted by Wordsworth. Relying on his acquaintance with the literary men of Edinburgh, he went in hopes of relieving his increasing financial difficulties by means of profitable literary work; nor was he disappointed, for he began almost at once to write for Blackwood's Magazine, and for Tait's Magazine. In a couple of years he began to feel somewhat established in Edinburgh, and in 1830 Mrs. De Quincey and the children came to live with him. They lived here and there in the city, never remaining long in one place. In 1837 Mrs. De Quincey died, and in 1840 De Quincey and his children settled in Lasswade, near Edinburgh, where he made his home for the rest of his life, though he spent most of his time in lodgings in the city.

There is little more to tell about him. From 1851 to 1859 his time was largely taken up with gathering his writings from the various magazines to which he had contributed, into a collected edition. So great was his popularity in America that, in 1851, Mr. Fields began the issue of a collective edition; and in 1853 Hogg, the publisher of Hogg's Instructor, to which De Quincey was at this time a regular contributor, took the hint from the American publisher, and urged De Quincey's consent to a similar enterprise. The first volume appeared in 1853, and the last one in 1860, the year after his death, which occurred on the 8th of December, 1859.

HISTORY OF THE CONFESSIONS

When De Quincey came to London in 1821, his acquaintance with Taylor and Hessey, the proprietors of the London Magazine, led to the publication of the Confessions of an English Opium-Eater in the columns of that periodical. The Confessions appeared in the September and October numbers for 1821, occupying pages 293 to 312 (in double columns), and 353 to 379 of Volume IV. These portions consist of Parts I. and II. in their short, original form.

The interest aroused by these papers was very great; and in connection with a note sent by De Quincey, correcting a slight chronological error in the first part, the editor speaks, in the October number, of the articles in the following terms:—

“We are not often in the habit of eulogising our own work; but we cannot neglect the opportunity which the following explanatory note gives us of calling the attention of our readers to the deep, eloquent, and masterly paper which stands first in our present number. Such Confessions, so powerfully uttered, cannot fail to do more than interest the reader.”

The public clamored for still more Confessions; and in a letter printed in the December number of the London Magazine for 1821 De Quincey promised to supply this demand by a 'Third Part which would “record the particular effects of Opium between 1804–12,” and which he hoped to draw up with such assistance from fuller memoranda as he should be able to command on his return to the north. The editors definitely announced this promised Third Part in the same number of their magazine; but months passed on, and no Third Part appeared. Finally, in the December number of 1822, or one year after the promise of the Third Part, there appeared an Appendix to the Confessions of an English Opium-Eater, on pages 512–517 of Volume VI. This Appendix had been prepared for the Confessions, on their publication in book form in 1822, and serves as an apology by both author and publisher for the non-appearance of the long-promised Third Part. This Appendix, so well characterized by Masson as “whimsical,” has little or no connection with the rest of the book, and destroys its symmetry. It must not be thought of as being a part of the work in any artistic sense, as it does nothing toward making us better understand or appreciate the earlier parts. It is reprinted in this edition only because it was the conclusion written by De Quincey, and because of its bibliographical interest.

This closes the history of the work for the first thirty-odd years of its existence, except that as many as six editions appeared between 1821 and 1856. In the latter year the Collective Edition had reached the fifth volume, and De Quincey himself explains the situation, in a letter to his daughter, October, 1855, as follows:—

“A doubt had arisen whether, with my own horrible recoil from the labour of converging and unpacking all hoards of MSS., I could count on bringing together enough of the ‘Suspira’ (yet unpublished) materially to enlarge the volume. If not, this volume (standing amongst sister volumes of 320–360 pp.) would present only a beggarly amount of 120 pp. Upon which arose this dilemma — Either the volume must be strengthened by the addition of papers altogether alien, which to me was eminently disagreeable, as breaking up the unity of the volume — or else, if left in the slenderness of figure, would really to my feeling involve us in an act that looked very like swindling. How could 7s. 6d. be reasonably charged to the public for what obviously was but a third part in bulk of the other volumes? But could not the price for this anomalous volume have been commensurately lessened? No. Mr. H[ogg], the publisher, who knows, of course, so much more than I do about such cases, assures me that nothing so much annoys the trade as any interruption of the price scale upon a series of volumes. Such being the case, no remedy remained but that I should doctor the book, and expand it into a portliness that might countenance its price. I should, however, be misleading you if any impression were left upon your mind that I had eked out the volume by any wire-drawing process: on the contrary, nothing has been added which did not originally belong to my outline of the work, having been left out chiefly through hurry at the period of first, i.e. original, publication in the autumn of 1821.”¹

¹ A. H. Japp, Thomas De Quincey: His Life and Writings, pp. 387–388.

Accordingly, the book was published in 1856 in a greatly enlarged form ; and in this same letter we have the author's own judgment on the new form of the work :—

“It is almost rewritten ; and there cannot be much doubt that here and there it is enlivened, and so far improved. To justify the enormous labour it has cost me, most certainly it ought to be improved. And yet, reviewing the volume as a whole, now that I can look back from nearly the end to the beginning, greatly I doubt whether many readers will not prefer it in its original fragmentary state to its present full-blown development.”¹

We thus see that De Quincey was very little satisfied with the “improved” version, and that as an artistic whole he favored the earlier version. This judgment later critics have amply upheld ; and the words of Garnett admirably sum up the state of critical opinion on the subject :—

“The additions to the Opium-Eater are for the most part brilliant superfluities. They are not indeed mere excrescences, and may rather be compared to those excursions and variations into which a musician may be betrayed by consciousness of mastery and pleasure in execution until he has lost sight of his original theme. They convert the brief, pregnant narrative of one episode in a life into a diffuse autobiography.”²

¹ A. H. Japp, Thomas De Quincey: His Life and Writings, pp. 387-388.

² Richard Garnett, Confessions, p. viii.

There can be no doubt that this is perfectly true; for in the enlarged edition the First Part is intolerably long and involved, to the extent of positive obscurity.

But even if the two versions were more equally meritorious, the fact that the work in its original form had been before the public for over thirty years as the only version, and the fact that it had been recognized as one of the minor English classics long before the revised edition made its appearance, abundantly justifies us in preferring the earlier version, even though it is not the authoritative form.

The work as it appeared in the magazine is chosen as the text of the present edition, rather than the reprint of 1822, because it is probably nearer to what De Quincey actually wrote than that volume. At any rate, it is probable that it received somewhat more attention in proof. (See p. 162.)

STYLE OF THE CONFESSIONS

In the biographical sketch of De Quincey we have tried to point out the truth of the various incidents recorded in the work, and thus to show that the book is a very real "human document," a veritable transcript from the author's life. But, while this is true, and while this faithfulness and truth to his unique experiences does give to the book an enduring interest, it remains true that the permanence and lasting quality of the book does not arise from this cause, but from something far different. Many books live for no reason other than that the things they contain are of lasting value. They contain the thoughts, the ideas, or the principles, that mankind most needs for its best life; and so their content alone guarantees their lasting vitality, in spite of the lapse of time and independently of the faults or excellences of the manner in which the contents are expressed. Other books, again, live, not because the thoughts or principles that they contain are important, but often because their very mediocre thought, which has very little worth in its naked form, acquires a new value through perfection of expression. Such books live, as we say, by their style; and it is to this latter class that the Confessions belongs; for, while the matter contained in the book is not by any means trivial or mediocre, it remains true that the book is not the expression of any great thought or principle. Of course, the book derives a great part of its interest from the unique experience which it records, and from the intimate view it gives us of the author's personality, his sensations, his ideas, and his feelings; but, on the other hand, none of the things recorded in the book have any very great value, in the intellectual or moral sense of the word. Indeed, we may say that, in common with the whole class of confessions, the book labors under the disadvantage of approaching to morbidity, because it records things and experiences that are usually regarded as too personal and intimate for public view. Moreover, the book is a revelation of the rise and progress of a vice, with all its frightful and demoralizing consequences. From this charge of morbidity the book is delivered only by the childlike purity and delicacy of the author's treatment.

Nor does the book reveal any excuse for its being written because of some great moral or ethical impulse which drove the author to expression. Indeed, there is little or no interest in questions of conduct or morality shown in the book, nor does the author seem to have considered in any serious way the possible serious consequences of his revelations. He does defend himself from the charge of sensuality in his indulgence in opium-eating and of a lack of moral sense, but he does not enter very heartily into the defence, nor is it woven into the texture of the narrative. It is not meant by this that De Quincey was immoral: all that is meant is that his very purity and childlike simplicity did not permit him to see the possible moral question involved, from the grosser standpoint of the average mortal.

Since the Confessions contains no great intellectual or moral matter, how are we then to account for the undoubted vitality of the book? There is only one answer, and that is that the book is great and important as literature because of its style. When we consider its style, we see why almost from its first publication it was regarded as a minor classic; for it has those qualities that are characteristic of all great literature—distinction of treatment, choiceness of word and phrase, adequacy of expression—by means of which the thought and emotion of the book stand out in all the clearness of their original conception.

But while the book is distinguished by its style, the style possesses a peculiar quality. It is not a style of rounded fulness, such as is the expression of a man, who, full of thought and burning with emotion, can yet fuse both and give utterance to what is in him in calm and balanced phrase. The style, as is the case with most writers, is more or less one-sided; and the quality lacking in De Quincey is the intellectual one, while the emotional and imaginative qualities stand out with distinctive excellence. By this is not meant that the style is not clear: clear it certainly is, in that the thought is adequately expressed, but the clearness is not so much the clearness of the logical faculty as the clearness of the feelings. In nearly every case the clearness is not clearness of thought solely and simply, but it is that clearness which loses itself in vividness of feeling and emotion. To be sure, De

Quincey himself has laid claim to being an analytical and logical thinker, and others have supported it; but his work, as a body, contains comparatively little analytical thought. At any rate, the parts that display his analytic faculty are not the memorable or characteristic parts by which he lives in literature. His best and most distinctive work is the outcome of the opposite mode of thought, that is, the imaginative. The words and phrases are chosen, not to dissect the idea or thing, so to speak, but to paint it as it is in real life, palpitating with vitality, and surrounded with all the associated ideas and emotions with which we surround the persons and things in daily life. He says in the Confessions that he was "made an intellectual creature" from his birth, and that "intellectual in the highest sense" his pursuits and interests were. But while De Quincey undoubtedly was interested profoundly in the things of the mind, over all the book there is an atmosphere, not of intellectuality, but of sentiment and feeling. Macaulay and Matthew Arnold are intellectual; and we have only to mention these names to bring out the difference between their pages and those of the Confessions. The characteristic passages of the Confessions—the flight from school, the trunk, the outcast Ann, the incident of the Malay, and lastly the magnificent opium-dreams—would all become either trivial or vulgar or ridiculous, were it not for the ennobling touch of the sweet and pensive melancholy with which the whole book is suffused. In such creations the intellect plays only a very subordinate part: feeling and imagination are their very life and substance. Indeed, so dominant are De Quincey's sensations and emotions that they seem to get the better of his judgment at times. Hence the somewhat irreverent jesting in the midst of serious passages, the facetious digressions, and the hundred other irritating peculiarities with which his readers are familiar. Such blemishes are very few in the Confessions; but they appear with sufficient plainness to show that De Quincey retained the irresponsible gayety of the child, which constantly broke through the dignity and reserve of manhood.

De Quincey's style has been called poetic; and it is certain that no prose has more nearly approached the realm of poetry, in that it exhibits a freer play of the imagination than does that of almost any other writer. This is especially seen in those passages of the Confessions which contain his impassioned addresses, and in those which describe his opium-dreams. It is to be noticed that in these dreams the scenery and objects are for the most part vague and undefined. Objects do not stand out clearly through the gorgeous imagery and diction: we are given the idea of vast extents of time and space, of centuries on centuries, of infinite cloud, of mighty mountain: all is magnificence and grandeur; but one object melts into another, not retaining its clearness and distinctness of outline, as, for instance, in Dante, in whom the organizing intellectual activity was sufficiently strong to retain distinctness of outline in the object without destroying its grandeur. These are the most striking pages in the book, and they show most clearly the characteristics of its style.

When we take into account this dominance of the emotional over the intellectual, we are not surprised to find that one of the chief sources of the peculiar quality of the style is the excellence of the choice of words. The word is the primary element out of which a composition in prose or verse is built up; and the poet and the imaginative prose writer attach much more importance to the single word than does the intellectual, or logical, writer. With the poet and the imaginative prose writer, the words have an individuality, they stand for something individually, and hence it is in the poet and the imaginative writer that we see the most careful choice of words. In the choice of words, in this imaginative sense, the Confessions stands supreme among prose compositions. Examples abound throughout the book, of De Quincey's almost unerring sense for words. Indeed, carefully to study the book is in itself an education in this exquisite and all-important branch of composition.

Not only in the choice of single words, but in the grouping of them into sentences and paragraphs, does De Quincey occupy a very high place, and in some respects a unique one. His ear is of remarkable sensitiveness to sound effects, and his knowledge of the English vocabulary is so extensive that his sentences and paragraphs are things of beauty in themselves; and are so remarkable for stately rhythm, or for sweetness of sound, or for smoothness of flow, that we do not notice the extreme slightness of the thought that often underlies them. As Leslie Stephen says:—

“Language, according to the common phrase, is the dress of thought; and that dress is the best, according to modern canons of taste, which attracts least attention from its wearer. De Quincey scorns this sneaking maxim of prudence, and boldly challenges our admiration by appearing in the richest colouring that can be got out of the dictionary. His language deserves a commendation sometimes bestowed by ladies upon rich garments, that it is capable of standing up by itself. The form is so admirable that, for purposes of criticism, we must consider it as something apart from the substance. The most exquisite passages in De Quincey’s writings are all more or less attempts to carry out the idea expressed in the title of the dream fugue. They are intended to be musical compositions, in which words have to play the part of notes. They are impassioned, not in the sense of expressing any definite sentiment, but because, from the structure and combination of the sentences, they harmonise with certain phases of emotion.”¹

¹ Leslie Stephen, Hours in a Library, First Series, pp. 356–357.

De Quincey has divided literature into two classes: the literature of knowledge and the literature of power. It is to this latter class that his own writings belong; and they belong to it, not because they show a high order of constructive imagination, but almost solely because they show a marvellous power of expressing emotion in the inevitable word or phrase, which stands out as a thing of perfect beauty in itself. They live because they are the expression of a man who is keenly alive to a few of the primary feelings and emotions of himself and of humanity, and who expresses them in language which is so perfect a mirror that we feel and experience these feelings and emotions almost as vividly as in life. Perhaps the words of Wordsworth that are quoted on the title-page do not fall far short of a definitive summary of De Quincey's distinctive significance in English prose: —

“Choice word and measured phrase, above the reach
Of ordinary men; a stately speech.”

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- (1) WORKS : De Quincey's Collected Writings, edited by David Masson, 14 vols., with good index. London.
De Quincey's Works, 14 vols. Boston.
- (2) CONFESSIONS OF AN ENGLISH OPIUM-EATER :
The London Magazine, September and October, 1821 ; December, 1822.
First edition (in book form), English edition, 1822.
American edition, edited by Fields, 1851.
Edited by Garnett, 1885.
Edited by Sharp, 1886.
Second edition, 1856.
Edited by Hunter, 1896.
Partly first and partly second edition, edited by Wauchope, 1898.
- (3) LIFE OF DE QUINCEY :
Autobiography, Vols. I. and II. of Collected Writings.
H. A. Page (i.e. A. H. Japp), Thomas De Quincey : His Life and Writings.
David Masson, De Quincey (in English Men of Letters Series).

H. A. Page (i.e. A. H. Japp), De Quincey Memorials.

James Hogg, De Quincey and his Friends.
(Contains very interesting and valuable reminiscences and recollections by Woodhouse, Rae-Brown, Findlay, Hogg, Jacox, Payn; essays by Burton and Hodgson; and a Life by Page (Japp)).

(4) CRITICISM :

Leslie Stephen, Life of De Quincey (in Dictionary of National Biography).

Peter Bayne, Essays on Biography and Criticism.

J. Scott Clark, A Study of English Prose Writers.

G. Gilfillan, Literary Portraits.

Shadworth Hodgson, The Genius of De Quincey
(in Outcast Essays, or in Hogg's De Quincey and his Friends).

T. W. Hunt, Representative English Prose.

David Masson, Essays Biographical and Critical.

W. Minto, English Prose Literature.

Mrs. Oliphant, Victorian Age of English Literature.

George Saintsbury, Essays on English Literature, (1780-1860).

Leslie Stephen, Hours in a Library, I.

Atlantic Monthly, XII., 345-368.

Quarterly Review, CCX., 1-35.

Revue des deux mondes, CXXXVIII., 116-146, and 343-376.

CONFESSIONS OF AN ENGLISH OPIUM-EATER

PART I

TO THE READER

I HERE present you, courteous reader, with the record of a remarkable period in my life: according to my application of it, I trust that it will prove, not merely an interesting record, but, in a considerable degree, useful and instructive. In that hope it is, that I have drawn it up: and that must be my apology for breaking through that delicate and honourable reserve, which, for the most part, restrains us from the public exposure of our own errors and infirmities. Nothing, indeed, is more revolting to English feelings, than the spectacle of a human being obtruding on our notice his moral ulcers or scars, and tearing away that “decent drapery,” which time, or indulgence to human frailty, may have drawn over them: accordingly, the greater part of our confessions (that is, spontaneous and extra-judicial confessions) proceed from demireps, adventurers, or swindlers: and for any 5 such acts of gratuitous self-humiliation from those who can be supposed in sympathy with the decent and self-respecting part of society, we must look to °French literature, or to °that part of the German, which is tainted with the spurious and defective sensi-

10 bility of the French. All this I feel so forcibly, and so nervously am I alive to reproach of this tendency, that I have for many months hesitated about the propriety of allowing this, or any part of my narrative, to come before the public eye, until after my death 15 (when, for many reasons, the whole will be published): and it is not without an anxious review of the reasons, for and against this step, that I have, at last, concluded on taking it.

Guilt and misery shrink, by a natural instinct, from 20 public notice: they court privacy and solitude: and, even in their choice of a grave, will sometimes sequester themselves from the general population of the churchyard, as if declining to claim fellowship with the great family of man, and wishing (in the affecting 25 language of Mr. Wordsworth)

— °humbly to express
A penitential loneliness.

It is well, upon the whole, and for the interest of us all, that it should be so: nor would I willingly, in my own person, manifest a disregard of such salutary 5 feelings; nor in act or word do anything to weaken them. But, on the one hand, as my self-accusation does not amount to a confession of guilt, so, on the other, it is possible that, if it did, the benefit resulting to others, from the record of an experience purchased 10 at so heavy a price, might compensate, by a vast overbalance, for any violence done to the feelings I have noticed, and justify a breach of the general rule. Infirmity and misery do not, of necessity, imply guilt. They approach, or recede from, the shades of 15 that dark alliance, in proportion to the probable motives and prospects of the offender, and the palliations, known or secret, of the offence: in proportion as the temptations to it were potent from the first, and the resistance to it, in act or in effort, was earnest 20 to the last. For my own part, without breach of truth or modesty, I may affirm, that my life has been, on the whole, the life of a philosopher: from my birth I was made an intellectual creature: and intellectual in the highest sense my pursuits and pleasures have been, 25 even from my schoolboy days. If opium-eating be a sensual pleasure, and if I am bound to confess that I have indulged in it to an excess, °not yet recorded of any other man, it is no less true, that I have struggled 5 against this fascinating enthrallment with a religious zeal, and have, at length, accomplished what I never yet heard attributed to any other man — have untwisted, almost to its final links, the accursed chain which fettered me. Such a self-conquest may reasonably be 10 set off in counterbalance to any kind or degree of self-indulgence. Not to insist, that in my case, the self-conquest was unquestionable, the self-indulgence open to doubts of casuistry, according as that name shall be extended to acts aiming at the bare relief of pain, or 15 shall be restricted to such as aim at the excitement of positive pleasure.

Guilt, therefore, I do not acknowledge: and, if I did, it is possible that I might still resolve on the present act of confession, in consideration of the service which I may thereby render to the whole class 20 of opium-eaters. But who are they? Reader, I am sorry to say, a very numerous class indeed. Of this I became convinced some years ago, by computing, at that time, the number of those in one small class of 25 English society (the class of men distinguished for talents, or of eminent station), who were known to me, directly or indirectly, as opium-eaters; such for instance, as the eloquent and benevolent [°William Wilberforce]; the late °Dean of [Carlisle]; °Lord [Ers- 5 kine]; °Mr. —, the philosopher; a late °Under-Sec- 5 retary of State (who described to me the sensation which first drove him to the use of opium, in the very same words as the Dean of [Carlisle], viz. “that he felt as though rats were gnawing and abrading the coats of his stomach”); °Mr. [Coleridge]; and many 10 others, hardly less known, whom it would be tedious to mention. Now, if one class, comparatively so limited, could furnish so many scores of cases (and that within the knowledge of one single inquirer), it was a natural inference, that the entire population of 15 England would furnish a proportionable number. The soundness of this inference, however, I doubted, until some facts became known to me, which satisfied me, that it was not incorrect. I will mention two: 1. Three 20 respectable London druggists, in widely remote quarters 20 of London, from whom I happened lately to be purchasing small quantities of opium, assured me, that the number of amateur opium-eaters (as I may term them) was, at this time, immense; and that the difficulty of distinguishing those persons, to whom habit had rendered 25 opium necessary, from such as were purchasing it with a view to suicide, occasioned them daily trouble and disputes. This evidence respected London only. But, 2. (which will possibly surprise the reader more,) 5 some years ago, on passing through Manchester, I was informed by several cotton manufacturers, that their workpeople were rapidly getting into the practice of opium-eating; so much so, that on a Saturday afternoon the counters of the druggists were strewed with 10 pills of one, two, or three grains, in preparation for the known demand of the evening. The immediate occasion of this practice was the lowness of wages, which, at that time, would not allow them to indulge in ale or spirits: and, wages rising, it may be thought 15 that this practice would cease: but, as I do not readily believe that any man, having once tasted the divine luxuries of opium, will afterwards descend to the gross and mortal enjoyments of alcohol, I take it for granted,

20 °That those eat now, who never ate before ;
And those who always ate, now eat the more.

Indeed the fascinating powers of opium are admitted, even by medical writers, who are its greatest enemies: thus, for instance, °Awsiter, apothecary to Greenwich-hospital, in his "Essay on the Effects of Opium" (published in the year 1763), when attempting to explain, why °Mead had not been sufficiently explicit on the properties, counteragents, &c. of this drug, expresses himself in the following mysterious 5 terms (°φωναυτα συνετοισι): "perhaps he thought the subject of too delicate a nature to be made common; and as many people might then indiscriminately use it, it would take from that necessary fear and caution, which should prevent their experiencing the extensive 10 power of this drug: for there are many properties in it, if universally known, that would habituate the use, and make it more in request with us than the Turks themselves: the result of which knowledge," he adds, "must prove a general misfortune." In the neces- 15 sity of this conclusion I do not altogether concur: but upon that point I shall have occasion to speak at the close of my confessions, where I shall present the reader with the moral of my narrative.

PRELIMINARY CONFESSIONS

These preliminary confessions, or introductory narra- 20 tive of the youthful adventures which laid the foundation of the writer's habit of opium-eating in after-life, it has been judged proper to premise, for three several reasons :

1. As forestalling that question, and giving it a satisfactory answer, which else would painfully obtrude
5 itself in the course of the Opium Confessions — “How came any reasonable being to subject himself to such a yoke of misery, voluntarily to incur a captivity so servile, and knowingly to fetter himself with such a sevenfold chain?” — a question which, if not some-10 where plausibly resolved, could hardly fail, by the indignation which it would be apt to raise as against an act of wanton folly, to interfere with that degree of sympathy which is necessary in any case to an author’s purposes.

15 2. As furnishing a key to some parts of that tremendous scenery which afterwards peopled the dreams of the Opium-eater.

3. As creating some previous interest of a personal sort in the confessing subject, apart from the matter of 20 the confessions, which cannot fail to render the confessions themselves more interesting. If a man “whose talk is of oxen,” should become an Opium-eater, the probability is, that (if he is not too dull to dream at all) — he will dream about oxen: whereas, in the 25 case before him, the reader will find that the Opiumeater boasteth himself to be a philosopher; and accordingly, that the phantasmagoria of his dreams (waking or sleeping, day-dreams or night-dreams) is suitable to one who, in that character, °Humani nihil a se alienum putat.

5

For amongst the conditions which he deems indispensable to the sustaining of any claim to the title of philosopher, is not merely the possession of a superb intellect in its analytic functions (in which part of the pretention, however, England can for some generations show but few claimants; at least, he is not aware of any known candidate for this honour who can be styled emphatically a subtle thinker, with the exception of °Samuel Taylor Coleridge, and in a narrower department of thought, with the recent illustrious exception of °David Ricardo) — but also on such a constitution of the moral faculties as shall give him an °inner eye and power of intuition for the vision and the mysteries of our human nature: that constitution of faculties, in short, which (amongst all the generations of men that from the beginning of time have deployed into life, as it were, upon this planet) our English poets have possessed in the highest degree — and °Scottish professors in the lowest.

10

15

20

I have often been asked how I first came to be a regular opium-eater; and have suffered, very unjustly, in the opinion of my acquaintance, from being reputed to have brought upon myself all the sufferings which 5 I shall have to record, by a long course of indulgence in this practice, purely for the sake of creating an artificial state of pleasurable excitement. This, however, is a misrepresentation of my case. True it is, that for nearly ten years I did occasionally take 10 opium, for the sake of the exquisite pleasure it gave me: but so long as I took it with this view, I was effectually protected from all material bad consequences by the necessity of interposing long intervals between the several acts of indulgence, in order to 15 renew the pleasurable sensations. It was not for the purpose of creating pleasure, but of mitigating pain in the severest degree, that I first began to use opium as an article of daily diet. In the twenty-eighth year of my age, °a most painful affection of the stomach, 20 which I had first experienced about ten years before, attacked me in great strength. This affection had originally been caused by extremities of hunger, suffered in my boyish days. During the season of hope and redundant happiness which succeeded (that is,
25 from eighteen to twenty-four) it had slumbered: for the three following years it had revived at intervals: and now, under unfavourable circumstances, from depression of spirits, it attacked me with a violence that yielded to no remedies but opium. As the youthful sufferings, which first produced this derangement 5 of the stomach, were interesting in themselves, and in the circumstances that attended them, I shall here briefly retrace them.

My father died, when I was about seven years old, and left me to the care of four guardians. I was sent 10 to various schools, great and small; and was very early distinguished for my classical attainments, especially for my knowledge of Greek. At thirteen, I wrote Greek with ease; and at fifteen my command of that language was so great, that I not only com- 15 posed Greek verses in lyric metres, but could converse in Greek fluently and without embarrassment—an accomplishment which I have not since met with in any scholar of my times, and which, in my case, was owing to the practice of daily reading off the news- 20 papers into the best Greek I could furnish extempore: for the necessity of ransacking my memory and invention, for all sorts and combinations of periphrastic expressions, as equivalents for modern ideas, images, relations of things, &c. gave me a compass of diction 25 which would never have been called out by a dull translation of moral essays, &c. "That boy," said one of my masters, pointing the attention of a stranger to me, "that boy could harangue an Athenian mob, 5 better than you and I could address an English one." He who honoured me with this eulogy, was a °scholar, "and a °ripe and a good one:" and of all my tutors, was the only one whom I loved or revered. Unfortunately for me (and, as I afterwards learned, to 10 this worthy man's great indignation), I was transferred to the care, first of a °blockhead, who was in a perpetual panic, lest I should expose his ignorance; and finally, to that of a °respectable scholar, at the head of a great school on an ancient foundation. 15 This man had been appointed to his situation by [Brasenose] College, Oxford; and was a sound, well-built scholar, but (like most men, whom I have known from that college) coarse, clumsy, and inelegant. A miserable contrast he presented, in my eyes, to the 20 Etonian brilliancy of my favourite master: and besides, he could not disguise from my hourly notice, the poverty and meagreness of his understanding. It is a bad thing for a boy to be, and to know himself, far beyond his tutors, whether in knowledge or in 25 power of mind. This was the case, so far as regarded knowledge at least, not with myself only: for the two boys, who jointly with myself composed the first form, were better Grecians than the head-master, though not more elegant scholars, nor at all more accustomed to °sacrifice to the graces. When I first entered, I remember that we read °Sophocles; and it was a constant matter of triumph to us, the learned triumvirate of the first form, to see our °‘Archididas-calus’ (as he loved to be called) conning our lessons before we went up, and laying a regular train, with lexicon and grammar, for blowing up and blasting (as it were) any difficulties he found in the choruses; whilst we never condescended to open our books, until the moment of going up, and were generally employed in writing °epigrams upon his wig, or some such important matter. My two class-fellows were poor, and dependant for their future prospects at the university, on the recommendation of the head-master: but I, who had a small patrimonial property, the income of which was sufficient to support me at college, wished to be sent thither immediately. I made earnest representations on the subject to my guardians, but all to no purpose. One, who was more reasonable, and had more knowledge of the world than the rest, lived at a distance: two of the other three resigned all their authority into the hands of the fourth; and this fourth with whom I had to negotiate, was a worthy man, in his way, but haughty, obstinate, and intolerant of all opposition to his will. After a certain number of 5 letters and personal interviews, I found that I had nothing to hope for, not even a compromise of the matter, from my guardian: unconditional submission was what he demanded: and I prepared myself, therefore, for other measures. Summer was now com-

10 ing on with hasty steps, and my seventeenth birthday was fast approaching; after which day I had sworn within myself, that I would no longer be numbered amongst schoolboys. Money being what I chiefly wanted, I wrote to a °woman of high rank, who,
15 though young herself, had known me from a child, and had latterly treated me with great distinction, requesting that she would 'lend' me five guineas. For upwards of a week no answer came; and I was beginning to despond, when, at length, a servant put 20 into my hands a double letter, with a coronet on the seal. The letter was kind and obliging: the fair writer was on the sea-coast, and in that way the delay had arisen: she enclosed double of what I had asked, and good-naturedly hinted, that if I should never re-
25 pay her, it would not absolutely ruin her. Now then,

I was prepared for my scheme: ten guineas, added to about two which I had remaining from my pocket money, seemed to me sufficient for an indefinite length of time: and at that happy age, if no definite boundary can be assigned to one's power, the spirit of hope and pleasure makes it virtually infinite. 5

It is a °just remark of Dr. Johnson's (and what cannot often be said of his remarks, it is a very feeling one), that we never do anything consciously for the last time (of things, that is, which we have long been in the habit of doing) without sadness of heart. 10 This truth I felt deeply, when I came to leave [Manchester], a place which I did not love, and where I had not been happy. On the evening before I left [Manchester] for ever, I grieved when the ancient and lofty schoolroom resounded with the evening service, performed for the last time in my hearing; and at night, when the muster-roll of names was called over, and mine (as usual) was called first, I stepped forward, and, passing the head-master, who was standing by, I bowed to him, and looked earnestly in his face, thinking to myself, 'He is old and infirm, and in this world I shall not see him again.' I was right: I never did see him again, nor ever shall. He looked at me complacently, smiled goodnaturedly, returned 25

my salutation (or rather, my valediction), and we parted (though he knew it not) for ever. I could not reverence him intellectually: but he had been uniformly kind to me, and had allowed me many indulgencies: and I grieved at the thought of the mortification I should inflict upon him.

The morning came, which was to launch me into the world, and from which my whole succeeding life has, in many important points, taken its colouring. I lodged in the head-master's house, and had been allowed, from my first entrance, the indulgence of a private room, which I used both as a sleeping room and as a study. At half after three I rose, and gazed with deep emotion at the ancient towers of [the collegiate church], °drest in earliest light,' and beginning to crimson with the radiant lustre of a cloudless July morning. I was firm and immovable in my purpose: but yet agitated by anticipation of uncertain danger and troubles; and, if I could have foreseen the hurricane, and perfect hail-storm of affliction which soon fell upon me, well might I have been agitated. To this agitation the deep peace of the morning presented an affecting contrast, and in some degree a medicine. The silence was more profound than that of midnight: and to me the silence of a summer morning

is more touching than all other silence, because, the light being broad and strong, as that of noon-day at other seasons of the year, it seems to differ from perfect day, chiefly because man is not yet abroad; and thus, the peace of nature, and of the innocent creatures 5 of God, seems to be secure and deep, only so long as the presence of man, and his restless and unquiet spirit, are not there to trouble its sanctity. I dressed myself, took my hat and gloves, and lingered a little in the room. For the last year and a half this room 10 had been my °‘pensive citadel’: here I had read and studied through all the hours of night: and, though true it was, that for the latter part of this time I, who was framed for love and gentle affections, had lost my gaiety and happiness, during the strife and fever of 15 contention with my guardian; yet, on the other hand, as a boy, so passionately fond of books, and °dedicated to intellectual pursuits, I could not fail to have enjoyed many happy hours in the midst of general dejection. I wept as I looked round on the chair, hearth, writ- 20 ing-table, and other familiar objects, knowing too certainly, that I looked upon them for the last time. Whilst I write this, it is eighteen years ago; and yet, at this moment, I see distinctly as if it were yesterday, the lineaments and expression of the object 25 on which I fixed my parting gaze: it was a picture of the °lovely ——, which hung over the mantelpiece; the eyes and mouth of which were so beautiful, and the whole countenance so radiant with benignity, and divine tranquillity, that I had a thousand times laid down my pen, or my book, to gather consolation from it, as a devotee from his patron saint. Whilst I was yet gazing upon it, the deep tones of [Manchester] clock proclaimed that it was four o'clock. I went up to the picture, kissed it, and then gently walked out and closed the door for ever!

* * * * *

°So blended and intertwined in this life are occasions of laughter and of tears, that I cannot yet recal, without smiling, an incident which occurred at that time, and which had nearly put a stop to the immediate execution of my plan. I had a trunk of immense weight; for, besides my clothes, it contained nearly all my library. The difficulty was to get this removed to a carrier's: my room was at an aërial elevation in the house, and (what was worse) the staircase, which communicated with this angle of the building, was accessible only by a gallery, which passed the head-master's chamber door. I was a favourite with all the servants; and, knowing that any of them would screen me, and act confidentially, I communicated my embarrassment to a groom of the head-master's. The groom swore he would do anything I wished; and, when the time arrived, went up stairs to bring the trunk down. This I feared was beyond the strength 5 of any one man: however, the groom was a man — and had a back as spacious as °Salisbury plain. Accordingly he persisted in bringing down the trunk 10 alone, whilst I stood waiting at the foot of the last flight, in anxiety for the event. For some time I heard him descending with slow and firm steps: but, unfortunately, from his trepidation, as he drew near the dangerous quarter, within a few steps of the 15 gallery, his foot slipped; and the mighty burden falling from his shoulders, gained such increase of impetus at each step of the descent, that, on reaching the bottom, it trundled, or rather leaped, right across, with the noise of twenty devils, against the very bed- 20 room door of the archididasalus. My first thought was, that all was lost; and that my only chance for executing a retreat was to sacrifice my baggage. However, on reflection, I determined to abide the issue.

°Of Atlantean shoulders, fit to bear
The weight of mightiest monarchies;

The groom was in the utmost alarm, both on his own account and on mine: but, in spite of this, so irresistibly had the sense of the ludicrous, in this unhappy °contretems, taken possession of his fancy, that 5 he sang out a long, loud, and canorous peal of laughter, that might have wakened the °Seven Sleepers. At the sound of this resonant merriment, within the very ears of insulted authority, I could not myself forbear joining in it: subdued to this, not so much by 10 the unhappy °étourderie of the trunk, as by the effect it had upon the groom. We both expected, as a matter of course, that Dr. [Lawson] would sally out of his room: for, in general, if but a mouse stirred, he sprang out like a mastiff from his kennel.
15 Strange to say, however, on this occasion, when the noise of laughter had ceased, no sound, or rustling even, was to be heard in the bedroom. Dr. [Lawson] had a painful complaint, which, sometimes keeping him awake, made his sleep, perhaps, when it did 20 come, the deeper. Gathering courage from the silence, the groom hoisted his burden again, and accomplished the remainder of his descent without accident. I waited until I saw the trunk placed on a wheelbarrow, and on its road to the carrier's: then, °'with 25 Providence my guide,' I set off on foot, — carrying a small parcel, with some articles of dress, under my arm; °a favourite English poet in one pocket; and a small 12mo. volume, containing about nine plays of °Euripides, in the other.

It had been my intention originally to proceed to 5 Westmoreland, both from the love I bore to that country, and on other °personal accounts. °Accident, however, gave a different direction to my wanderings, and I bent my steps towards North Wales.

After wandering about for some time in Denbigh- 10 shire, Merionethshire, and Carnarvonshire, I took lodgings in a small neat house in B[angor]. Here I might have stayed with great comfort for many weeks; for, provisions were cheap at B[angor], from the scarcity of other markets for the surplus produce of a wide 15 agricultural district. An accident, however, in which, perhaps, no offence was designed, drove me out to wander again. I know not whether my reader may have remarked, but I have often remarked, that the proudest class of people in England (or at any rate, 20 the class whose pride is most apparent) are the families of bishops. Noblemen, and their children, carry about with them, in their very titles, a sufficient notification of their rank. Nay, their very names (and 25 this applies also to the children of many untitled houses) are often, to the English ear, adequate exponents of high birth, or descent. Sackville, Manners, Fitzroy, Paulet, Cavendish, and scores of others, tell their own tale. Such persons, therefore, find every-5 where a due sense of their claims already established, except among those who are ignorant of the world, by virtue of their own obscurity: °Not to know them, argues one's self unknown.' Their manners take a suitable tone and colouring; and, for once that they

10 find it necessary to impress a sense of their consequence upon others, they meet with a thousand occasions for moderating and tempering this sense by acts of courteous condescension. With the families of bishops it is otherwise: with them it is all up-hill
15 work, to make known their pretensions: for the proportion of the episcopal bench, taken from noble families, is not at any time very large; and the succession to these dignities is so rapid, that the public ear seldom has time to become familiar with them, unless 20 where they are connected with some literary reputation. Hence it is, that the children of bishops carry about with them an austere and repulsive air, indicative of claims not generally acknowledged, a sort of °noli me tangere manner, nervously apprehensive of too 25 familiar approach, and shrinking with the sensitiveness of a gouty man, from all contact with the ὄϊ πολλοί. Doubtless, a powerful understanding, or unusual goodness of nature, will preserve a man from such weakness: but, in general, the truth of my representation will be acknowledged: pride, if not of deeper 5 root in such families, appears, at least, more upon the surface of their manners. This spirit of manners naturally communicates itself to their domestics, and other dependants. Now, my landlady had been a lady's maid, or a nurse, in the family of the Bishop 10 of [Bangor]; and had but lately married away and 'settled' (as such people express it) for life. In a little town like B[angor], merely to have lived in the bishop's family, conferred some distinction: and my good landlady had rather more than her share of the 15 pride I have noticed on that score. What 'my lord' said, and what 'my lord' did, how useful he was in parliament, and how indispensable at Oxford, formed the daily burden of her talk. All this I bore very well: for I was too good-natured to laugh in anybody's 20 face, and I could make an ample allowance for the garrulity of an old servant. Of necessity, however, I must have appeared in her eyes very inadequately impressed with the bishop's importance: and, perhaps, to punish me for my indifference, or possibly by 25 accident, she one day repeated to me a conversation in which I was indirectly a party concerned. She had been to the palace to pay her respects to the family; and, dinner being over, was summoned into the dining-5 room. In giving an account of her household economy, she happened to mention, that she had let her apartments. Thereupon the good bishop (it seemed) had taken occasion to caution her as to her selection of inmates: 'for,' said he, 'you must recollect, Betty,

10 that this place is in the high road to the Head; so that multitudes of Irish swindlers, running away from their debts into England — and of English swindlers, running away from their debts to the Isle of Man, are likely to take this place in their route.' This advice
15 was certainly not without reasonable grounds: but rather fitted to be stored up for Mrs. Betty's private meditations, than specially reported to me. What followed, however, was somewhat worse: — 'Oh, my lord,' answered my landlady (according to her own 20 representation of the matter), 'I really don't think this young gentleman is a swindler; because —': 'You don't think me a swindler?' said I, interrupting her, in a tumult of indignation: 'for the future I shall spare you the trouble of thinking about it.' And with-25 out delay I prepared for my departure. Some concessions the good woman seemed disposed to make: but a harsh and contemptuous expression, which I fear that I applied to the learned dignitary himself, roused her indignation in turn: and reconciliation then became impossible. I was, indeed, greatly irritated at the bishop's having suggested any grounds of suspicion, however remotely, against a person whom he had never seen: and I thought of letting him know my mind in Greek: which, at the same time that it would furnish some presumption that I was no swindler, would also (I hoped) compel the bishop to reply in the same language; in which case, I doubted not to make it appear, that if I was not so rich as his lordship, I was a far better Grecian. Calmer thoughts, however, drove this boyish design out of my mind: for I considered, that the bishop was in the right to counsel an old servant; that he could not have designed that his advice should be reported to me; and that the same coarseness of mind, which had led Mrs. Betty to repeat the advice at all, might have coloured it in a way more agreeable to her own style of thinking, than to the actual expressions of the worthy bishop.

I left the lodgings the very same hour; and this turned out a very unfortunate occurrence for me: because, living henceforward at inns, I was drained of my money very rapidly. In a fortnight I was reduced to short allowance; that is, I could allow myself only one meal a-day. From the keen appetite produced by constant exercise, and mountain air, acting on a youthful stomach, I soon began to suffer greatly on this slender regimen; for the single meal, which I could venture to order, was coffee or tea. Even this, however, was at length withdrawn: and afterwards, so long as I remained in Wales, I subsisted either on blackberries, hips, haws, &c. or on the casual hospitalities which I now and then received, in return for such little services as I had an opportunity of rendering. Sometimes I wrote letters of business for cottagers, who happened to have relatives in Liverpool, or in London: more often I wrote love-letters to their sweethearts for young women who had lived as servants at Shrewsbury, or other towns on the English border. On all such occasions I gave great satisfaction to my humble friends, and was generally treated with hospitality: and once, in particular, near the village of Llan-y-styndw (or some such name), in a sequestered part of Merionethshire, I was entertained for upwards of three days by a family of young people, with an affectionate and fraternal kindness that left an impression upon my heart not yet impaired. The family consisted, at that time, of four sisters, and three brothers, all grown up, and all remarkable for elegance and delicacy of manners. So much beauty, and so much native good-breeding and refinement, I do not remember to have seen before or since in any cottage, 5 except once or twice in °Westmoreland and Devonshire. They spoke English: an accomplishment not often met with in so many members of one family, especially in villages remote from the high-road. Here I wrote, on my first introduction, a letter about 10 prize-money, for one of the brothers, who had served on board an English man of war; and more privately, two love-letters for two of the sisters. They were both interesting looking girls, and one of uncommon loveliness. In the midst of their confusion and blushes, 15 whilst dictating, or rather giving me general instructions, it did not require any great penetration to discover that what they wished was, that their letters should be as kind as was consistent with proper maidenly pride. I contrived so to temper my ex- 20 pressions, as to reconcile the gratification of both feelings: and they were as much pleased with the way in which I had expressed their thoughts, as (in their simplicity) they were astonished at my having so readily discovered them. The reception one meets 25 with from the women of a family, generally determines the tenor of one's whole entertainment. In this case, I had discharged my confidential duties as secretary, so much to the general satisfaction, perhaps also amusing them with my conversation, that I was pressed to stay with a cordiality which I had little inclination to resist. I slept with the brothers, the only unoccupied bed standing in the apartment of the young women: but in all other points they treated me with a respect not usually paid to purses as light as mine; as if my scholarship were sufficient evidence that I was of "gentle blood." Thus I lived with them for three days, and great part of a fourth: and, from the undiminished kindness which they continued to show me, I believe I might have staid with them up to this time, if their power had corresponded with their wishes. On the last morning, however, I perceived upon their countenances, as they sate at breakfast, the expression of some unpleasant communication which was at hand; and soon after one of the brothers explained to me that their parents had gone, the day before my arrival, to an annual meeting of Methodists, held at Carnarvon, and were that day expected to return; "and if they should not be so civil as they ought to be," he begged, on the part of all the young people, that I would not take it amiss. The parents returned, with churlish faces, and "Dym Sassenach" (no English), in answer to all my addresses. I saw how matters stood; and so, taking an affectionate leave of my kind and interesting young 5 hosts, I went my way. For, though they spoke warmly to their parents in my behalf, and often excused the manner of the old people, by saying, that it was "only their way," yet I easily understood that my talent for writing love-letters would do as little to recom- 10 mend me with two grave sexagenarian Welsh Methodists, as my Greek °Sapphics or Alcæics: and what had been hospitality when offered to me with the gracious courtesy of my young friends, would become charity, when connected with the harsh demeanour of these 15 old people. Certainly, °Mr. Shelley is right in his notions about old age: unless powerfully counteracted by all sorts of opposite agencies, it is a miserable corrupter and blighter to the genial charities of the human heart. 20

Soon after this, I contrived, by °means which I must omit for want of room, to transfer myself to London. And now began the latter and fiercer stage of my long sufferings; without using a disproportionate expression, I might say, of my agony. For I now 25 suffered, for upwards of sixteen weeks, the physical anguish of hunger in various degrees of intensity; but as bitter, perhaps, as ever any human being can have suffered who has survived it. I would not need-

5 lessly harass my reader's feelings, by a detail of all that I endured: for extremities such as these, under any circumstances of heaviest misconduct or guilt, cannot be contemplated, even in description, without a rueful pity that is painful to the natural goodness
10 of the human heart. Let it suffice, at least on this occasion, to say, that a few fragments of bread from the breakfast-table of one individual (who supposed me to be ill, but did not know of my being in utter want), and these at uncertain intervals, constituted
15 my whole support. During the former part of my sufferings (that is, generally in Wales, and always for the first two months in London) I was houseless, and very seldom slept under a roof. To this constant exposure to the open air I ascribe it mainly, that I
20 did not sink under my torments. Latterly, however, when colder and more inclement weather came on, and when, from the length of my sufferings, I had begun to sink into a more languishing condition, it was, no doubt, fortunate for me, that the same person 25 to whose breakfast-table I had access, allowed me to sleep in a large unoccupied house, of which he was tenant. Unoccupied, I call it, for there was no household or establishment in it; nor any furniture, indeed, except a table, and a few chairs. But I found, on taking possession of my new quarters, that the house 5 already contained one single inmate, a poor friendless child, apparently ten years old; but she seemed hunger-bitten; and sufferings of that sort often make children look older than they are. From this forlorn child I learned, that she had slept and lived there 10 alone, for some time before I came: and great joy the poor creature expressed, when she found that I was, in future, to be her companion through the hours of darkness. The house was large; and, from the want of furniture, the noise of the rats made a pro- 15 digious echoing on the spacious stair-case and hall; and, amidst the real fleshly ills of cold, and, I fear, hunger, the forsaken child had found leisure to suffer still more (it appeared)-from the self-created one of 20 ghosts. I promised her protection against all ghosts whatsoever: but, alas! I could offer her no other assistance. We lay upon the floor, with a bundle of 25 cursed law papers for a pillow: but with no other covering than a sort of large horseman's cloak: afterwards, however, we discovered, in a garret, an old sofa-cover, a small piece of rug, and some fragments of other articles, which added a little to our warmth. The poor child crept close to me for warmth, and for security against her ghostly enemies. When I was 5 not more than usually ill, I took her into my arms, so that, in general, she was tolerably warm, and often slept when I could not: for, during the last two months of my sufferings, I slept much in day-time, and was apt to fall into transient dozings at all hours.

10 But my sleep distressed me more than my watching: for, besides the tumultuousness of my dreams (which were only not so awful as those which I shall have to describe hereafter as produced by opium), my sleep was never more than what is called dog-sleep; so that 15 I could hear myself moaning, and was often, as it seemed to me, wakened suddenly by my own voice; and, about this time, a hideous sensation began to haunt me as soon as I fell into a slumber, which has since returned upon me, at different periods of 20 my life, viz. a sort of twitching (I know not where, but apparently about the region of the stomach), which compelled me violently to throw out my feet for the sake of relieving it. This sensation coming on as soon as I began to sleep, and the effort to relieve 25 it constantly awaking me, at length I slept only from exhaustion; and from increasing weakness (as I said before) I was constantly falling asleep, and constantly awaking. Meantime, the master of the house sometimes came in upon us suddenly, and very early, sometimes not till ten o'clock, sometimes not at all. He 5 was in constant fear of bailiffs: improving on °the plan of Cromwell, every night he slept in a different quarter of London; and I observed that he never failed to examine, through a private window, the appearance of those who knocked at the door, before 10 he would allow it to be opened. He breakfasted alone: indeed, his tea equipage would hardly have admitted of his hazarding an invitation to a second person—any more than the quantity of esculent matériel, which, for the most part, was little more 15 than a roll, or a few biscuits, which he had bought on his road from the place where he had slept. Or, if he had asked a party, as I once learnedly and facetiously observed to him—the several members of it must have stood in the relation to each other (not sate 20 in any relation whatever) of succession, as the metaphysicians have it, and not of a co-existence; in the relation of the parts of time, and not of the parts of space. During his breakfast, I generally contrived a reason for lounging in; and, with an air of as much 25 indifference as I could assume, took up such fragments as he had left—sometimes, indeed, there were none at all. In doing this, I committed no robbery except upon the man himself, who was thus obliged (I believe) now and then to send out at noon for an extra biscuit; for, as to the poor child, she was never admitted into his study (if I may give that name to his chief depository of parchments, law writings, &c.); that room was to her the °Blue-beard room of the house, being regularly locked on his departure to dinner, about six o'clock, which usually was his final departure for the night. °Whether this child were an illegitimate daughter of Mr. [Brunell], or only a servant, I could not ascertain; she did not herself know; but certainly she was treated altogether as a menial servant. No sooner did Mr. [Brunell] make his appearance, than she went below stairs, brushed his shoes, coat, &c.; and, except when she was summoned to run an errand, she never emerged from the dismal °Tartarus of the kitchens, &c. to the upper air, until my welcome knock at night called up her little trembling footsteps to the front door. Of her life during the daytime, however, I knew little but what I gathered from her own account at night; for, as soon as the hours of business commenced, I saw that my absence would be acceptable; and, in general, therefore, I went off and sate in the parks, or elsewhere, until nightfall.

But who, and what, meantime, was the master of the house himself? Reader, he was one of those anomalous practitioners in lower departments of the law, who — what shall I say? — who, on prudential reasons, or from necessity, deny themselves all indulgence in the luxury of too delicate a conscience: (a periphrasis which might be abridged considerably, but that I leave to the reader's taste:) in many walks of life, a conscience is a more expensive encumbrance, than a wife or a carriage; and just as people talk of "laying down" their carriages, so I suppose my friend, Mr. [Brunell] had "laid down" his conscience for a time; meaning, doubtless, to resume it as soon as he could afford it. The inner economy of such a man's daily life would present a most strange picture, if I could allow myself to amuse the reader at his expense. Even with my limited opportunities for observing what went on, I saw many scenes of London intrigues, and complex chicanery, "cycle and epicycle, orb in orb," at which I sometimes smile to this day — and at which I smiled then, in spite of my misery. My situation, however, at that time, gave me little experience, in my own person, of any qualities in Mr. [Brunell]'s character but such as did him honour; and of his whole strange composition, I must forget everything but that towards me he was obliging, and, to the extent of his power, generous.

That power was not, indeed, very extensive; how-
5 ever, in common with the rats, I sate rent free; and, as °Dr. Johnson has recorded, that he never but once in his life had as much wall-fruit as he could eat, so let me be grateful, that on that single occasion I had as large a choice of apartments in a London mansion
10 as I could possibly desire. Except the Blue-beard room, which the poor child believed to be haunted, all others, from the attics to the cellars, were at our service; °“the world was all before us;” and we pitched our tent for the night in any spot we chose. This house I have 15 already described as a large one; it stands in a conspicuous situation, and in a well-known part of London. Many of my readers will have passed it, I doubt not, within a few hours of reading this. For myself, I never fail to visit it when business draws me to Lon-
20 don; about ten o'clock, this very night, August 15, 1821, being my birth-day — I turned aside from my evening walk, down Oxford-street, purposely to take a glance at it: it is now occupied by a respectable family; and, by the lights in the front drawing-room, I observed a 25 domestic party, assembled perhaps at tea, and apparently cheerful and gay. Marvellous contrast in my eyes to the darkness—cold—silence—and desolation of that same house °eighteen years ago, when its nightly occupants were one famishing scholar, and a neglected child. — Her, by the bye, in after years, I 5 vainly endeavoured to trace. Apart from her situation, she was not what would be called an interesting child: she was neither pretty, nor quick in understanding, nor remarkably pleasing in manners. But, thank God! even in those years I needed not the embellishments 10 of novel-accessaries to conciliate my affections; plain human nature, in its humblest and most homely apparel, was enough for me: and I loved the child because she was my partner in wretchedness. If she is now living, she is probably a mother, with children of her own; but, 15 as I have said, I could never trace her.

This I regret, but another person there was at that time, whom I have since sought to trace with far deeper earnestness, and with far deeper sorrow at my failure. This person was a young woman, and one 20 of that unhappy class who subsist upon the wages of prostitution. I feel no shame, nor have any reason to feel it, in avowing, that I was then on familiar and friendly terms with many women in that unfortunate condition. The reader needs neither smile at this 25 avowal, nor frown. For, not to remind my classical readers of the old Latin proverb — °‘Sine Cerere,’ &c., it may well be supposed that in the existing state of my purse, my connection with such women could not

5 have been an impure one. °But the truth is, that at no time of my life have I been a person to hold myself polluted by the touch or approach of any creature that wore a human shape: on the contrary, from my very 10 earliest youth it has been my pride to converse familiarly, °more Socratico, with all human beings, man, woman, and child, that chance might fling in my way: a practice which is friendly to the knowledge of human nature, to good feelings, and to that frankness
15 of address which becomes a man who would be thought a philosopher. For a philosopher should not see with the eyes of the °poor liminary creature calling himself a man of the world, and filled with narrow and self-regarding prejudices of birth and education, but should look upon himself as a Catholic creature, and as stand-20 ing in equal relation to high and low — to educated and uneducated, to the guilty, and the innocent. Being myself at that time of necessity a peripatetic, or a walker of the streets, I naturally fell in more frequently with those female peripatetics who are tech-
25 nically called Street-walkers. Many of these women had occasionally taken my part against watchmen who wished to drive me off the steps of houses where I was sitting. But one amongst them, the one on whose account I have at all introduced this subject—yet no! let me not class thee, Oh noble-minded Ann ———, 5 with that order of women; let me find, if it be possible, some gentler name to designate the condition of her to whose bounty and compassion, ministering to my necessities when all the world had forsaken me, I owe it that I am at this time alive.—For many 10 weeks I had walked at nights with this poor friendless girl up and down Oxford Street, or had rested with her on steps and under the shelter of porticos. She could not be so old as myself: she told me, indeed, that she had not completed her sixteenth year. 15

By such questions as my interest about her prompted, I had gradually drawn forth her simple history. Hers was a case of ordinary occurrence (as I have since had reason to think), and one in which, if London beneficence had better adapted its arrangements 20 to meet it, the power of the law might oftener be interposed to protect, and to avenge. But the stream of London charity flows in a channel which, though deep and mighty, is yet noiseless and underground; not obvious or readily accessible to poor houseless 25 wanderers: and it cannot be denied that the outside air and framework of London society is harsh, cruel, and repulsive. In any case, however, I saw that part of her injuries might easily have been redressed: and I urged her often and earnestly to lay her complaint before a magistrate: friendless as she was, I assured her that she would meet with immediate attention; and that English justice, which was no respecter of persons, would speedily and amply avenge her on the brutal ruffian who had plundered her little property. She promised me often that she would; but she delayed taking the steps I pointed out from time to time: for she was timid and dejected to a degree which showed how deeply sorrow had taken hold of her young heart; and perhaps she thought justly that the most upright judge, and the most righteous tribunals, could do nothing to repair her heaviest wrongs. Something, however, would perhaps have been done: for it had been settled between us at length, but unhappily on the very last time but one that I was ever to see her, that in a day or two we should go together before a magistrate, and that I should speak on her behalf. This little service it was destined, however, that I should never realise. Meantime, that which she rendered to me, and which was greater than

I could ever have repaid her, was this:— One night, when we were pacing slowly along Oxford Street, and after a day when I had felt more than usually ill and faint, I requested her to turn off with me into Soho Square: thither we went; and we sate down on the 5 steps of a house, which, to this hour, I never pass without a pang of grief, and an inner act of homage to the spirit of that unhappy girl, in memory of the noble action which she there performed. Suddenly, as we sate, I grew much worse: I had been leaning 10 my head against her bosom; and all at once I sank from her arms and fell backwards on the steps. From the sensations I then had, I felt an inner conviction of the liveliest kind that without some powerful and reviving stimulus, I should either have died on the 15 spot—or should at least have sunk to a point of exhaustion from which all reäscent under my friendless circumstances would soon have become hopeless. Then it was, at this crisis of my fate, that my poor orphan companion—who had herself met with little 20 but injuries in this world—stretched out a saving hand to me. Uttering a cry of terror, but without a moment's delay, she ran off into Oxford Street, and in less time than could be imagined, returned to me with a glass of port wine and spices, that acted upon my 25 empty stomach (which at that time would have rejected all solid food) with an instantaneous power of restoration: and for this glass the generous girl without a murmur paid out of her humble purse at 5 a time — be it remembered! — when she had scarcely wherewithal to purchase the bare necessaries of life, and when she could have no reason to expect that I should ever be able to reimburse her. — Oh! youthful benefactress! how often in succeeding years, standing

10 in solitary places, and thinking of thee with grief of heart and perfect love, how often have I wished that, as in ancient times the curse of a father was believed to have a supernatural power, and to pursue its object with a fatal necessity of self-fulfilment, — even so the 15 benediction of a heart oppressed with gratitude might have a like prerogative; might have power given to it from above to °chace — to haunt — to way-lay — to overtake — to pursue thee into the central darkness of a London brothel, or (if it were possible) into the 20 darkness of the grave — there to awaken thee with an authentic message of peace, and forgiveness, and of final reconciliation!

I do not often weep: for not only do my thoughts on subjects connected with the chief interests of man 25 daily, nay hourly, descend a thousand fathoms °“too deep for tears ;” not only does the sternness of my habits of thought present an antagonism to the feelings which prompt tears — wanting of necessity to those who, being protected usually by their levity from any tendency to meditative sorrow, would by that same levity be made incapable of resisting it on any casual access of such feelings : — but also, I believe that all minds which have contemplated such objects as deeply as I have done, must, for their own protection from utter despondency, have early encouraged and cherished some tranquilizing belief as to the future balances and the hieroglyphic meanings of human sufferings. On these accounts, I am cheerful to this hour : and, as I have said, I do not often weep. °Yet some feelings, though not deeper or more passionate, are more tender than others : and often, when I walk at this time in Oxford Street by dreamy lamplight, and hear those airs played on a barrel-organ which years ago solaced me and my dear companion (as I must always call her) I shed tears, and muse with myself at the mysterious dispensation which so suddenly and so critically separated us for ever. How it happened, the reader will understand from what remains of this introductory narration.

Soon after the period of the last incident I have recorded, I met, in Albemarle Street, a gentleman of his °late Majesty's household. This gentleman had received hospitalities, on different occasions, from my family: and he challenged me upon the strength of 5 my family likeness. I did not attempt any disguise: I answered his questions ingenuously, — and, on his pledging his word of honour that he would not betray me to my guardians, I gave him an address to my friend the Attorney's. The next day I received from 10 him a 10*l.* Bank-note. The letter inclosing it was delivered with other letters of business to the attorney: but, though his look and manner informed me that he suspected its contents, he gave it up to me honourably and without demur.

15 This present, from the particular service to which it was applied, leads me naturally to speak of the purpose which had allured me up to London, and which I had been (to use a forensic word) °soliciting from the first day of my arrival in London, to that of my final 20 departure.

In so mighty a world as London, it will surprise my readers that I should not have found some means of staving off the last extremities of penury: and it will strike them that two resources at least must have been 25 open to me, — viz. either to seek assistance from the friends of my family, or to turn my youthful talents and attainments into some channel of pecuniary emolument. As to the first course, I may observe, generally, that what I dreaded beyond all other evils was the chance of being reclaimed by my guardians; not doubting that whatever power the law gave them would have been enforced against me to the utmost; that is, to the extremity of forcibly restoring me to the school which I had quitted: a restoration which as it would in my eyes have been a dishonour, even if submitted to voluntarily, could not fail, when extorted from me in contempt and defiance of my known wishes and efforts, to have been a humiliation worse to me than death, and which would indeed have terminated in death. I was, therefore, shy enough of applying for assistance even in those quarters where I was sure of receiving it — at the risk of furnishing my guardians with any clue for recovering me. But, as to London in particular, though, doubtless, my father had in his life-time had many friends there, yet (as ten years had passed since his death) I remembered few of them even by name: and never having seen London before, except once for a few hours, I knew not the address of even those few. To this mode of gaining help, therefore, in part the difficulty, but much more the paramount fear which I have mentioned, habitually indisposed me. In regard to the other mode, I now feel half inclined to join my reader in wondering that I should have overlooked it. As a corrector of Greek proofs (if in no other way), I might doubtless have gained enough for my slender wants. Such an office as this I could have discharged with an exemplary and punctual accuracy that would soon have gained me the confidence of my employers. But it must not be forgotten that, even for such an office as this, it was necessary that I should first of all have an introduction to some respectable publisher: and this I had no means of obtaining. To say the truth, however, it had never once occurred to me to think of literary labours as a source of profit. No mode sufficiently speedy of obtaining money had ever occurred to me, but that of borrowing it on the strength of my future claims and expectations. This mode I sought by every avenue to compass: and amongst other persons I applied to a Jew named D[ell].

To this Jew, and to other advertising money-lenders (some of whom were, I believe, also Jews), I had introduced myself with an account of my expectations; which account, on examining my father's will at °Doctor's Commons, they had ascertained to be correct. The person there mentioned as the second son of [°Thomas Quincey], was found to have all the claims (or more than all) that I had stated: but one question still remained, which the faces of the Jews pretty significantly suggested, — was I that person? This 5 doubt had never occurred to me as a possible one: I had rather feared, whenever my Jewish friends scrutinised me keenly, that I might be too well known to be that person — and that some scheme might be passing in their minds for entrapping me and selling me 10 to my guardians. It was strange to me to find my own self, °materialiter considered (so I expressed it, for I doated on logical accuracy of distinctions), accused, or at least suspected, of counterfeiting my own self, °formaliter considered. However, to satisfy their 15 scruples, I took the only course in my power. Whilst I was in Wales, I had received various letters from young friends: these I produced: for I carried them constantly in my pocket — being, indeed, by this time, almost the only relics of my personal encumbrances 20 (excepting the clothes I wore) which I had not in one way or other disposed of. Most of these letters were from the Earl of [Altamont], who was at that time my chief (or rather only) confidential friend. These letters were dated from Eton. I had also some from 25

the Marquis of [Sligo], his father, who, though absorbed in agricultural pursuits, yet having been an Etonian himself, and as good a scholar as a nobleman needs to be — still retained an affection for classical studies, and for youthful scholars. He had, accordingly, from the time that I was fifteen, corresponded with me; sometimes upon the great improvements which he had made, or was meditating, in the counties of M[ayo] and Sl[igo] since I had been there; sometimes upon the merits of a Latin poet; and at other times, suggesting subjects to me on which he wished me to write verses.

On reading the letters, one of my Jewish friends agreed to furnish two or three hundred pounds on my personal security — provided I could persuade the young Earl, who was, by the way, not older than myself, to guarantee the payment on our coming of age: the Jew's final object being, as I now suppose, not the trifling profit he could expect to make by me, but the prospect of establishing a connection with my noble friend, whose immense expectations were well known to him. In pursuance of this proposal on the part of the Jew, about eight or nine days after I had received the 10*l.*, I prepared to go down to Eton. Nearly 3*l.* of the money I had given to my money-lending friend, on his alleging that the stamps must be bought, in order that the writings might be preparing whilst I was away from London. I thought in my heart that he was lying; but I did not wish to give him any excuse for charging his own delays upon me. A smaller sum I had given to my friend the attorney (who was connected with the money-lenders as their lawyer), to which, indeed, he was entitled for his unfurnished lodgings. About fifteen shillings I had employed in re-establishing (though in a very humble way) my dress. Of the remainder I gave one quarter to Ann, meaning on my return to have divided with her whatever might remain. These arrangements made, — soon after six o'clock, on a dark winter evening, I set off, accompanied by Ann, towards Piccadilly; for it was my intention to go down as far as Salt-hill on the Bath or Bristol Mail. Our course lay through a part of the town which has now all disappeared, so that I can no longer retrace its ancient boundaries: Swallow-street, I think it was called. Having time enough before us, however, we bore away to the left until we came into Golden-square: there, near the corner of Sherrard-street, we sat down; not wishing to part in the tumult and blaze of Piccadilly. I had told her of my plans some time before:

and I now assured her again that she should share in my good fortune, if I met with any; and that I would never forsake her, as soon as I had power to protect her. This I fully intended, as much from inclination 5 as from a sense of duty: for, setting aside gratitude, which in any case must have made me her debtor for life, I loved her as affectionately as if she had been my sister: and at this moment, with seven-fold tenderness, from pity at witnessing her extreme dejection.
10 I had, apparently, most reason for dejection, because I was leaving the saviour of my life: yet I, considering the shock my health had received, was cheerful and full of hope. She, on the contrary, who was parting with one who had had little means of serving 15 her, except by kindness and brotherly treatment, was overcome by sorrow; so that, when I kissed her at our final farewell, she put her arms about my neck, and wept without speaking a word. I hoped to return in a week at farthest, and I agreed with her that on 20 the fifth night from that, and every night afterwards, she should wait for me at six o'clock, near the bottom of Great Titchfield-street, which had been our customary haven, as it were, of rendezvous, to prevent our missing each other in the great Mediterranean of 25 Oxford-street. This, and other measures of precaution,

I took: one only I forgot. She had either never told me, or (as a matter of no great interest) I had forgotten, her surname. It is a general practice, indeed, with girls of humble rank in her unhappy condition, not (as novel-reading women of higher pretensions) to style themselves — Miss Douglas, Miss Montague, &c. but simply by their Christian names, Mary, Jane, Frances, &c. Her surname, as the surest means of tracing her hereafter, I ought now to have inquired: but the truth is, having no reason to think that our meeting could, in consequence of a short interruption, be more difficult or uncertain than it had been for so many weeks, I had scarcely for a moment adverted to it as necessary, or placed it amongst my memoranda against this parting interview: and, my final anxieties being spent in comforting her with hopes, and in pressing upon her the necessity of getting some medicines for a violent cough and hoarseness with which she was troubled, I wholly forgot it until it was too late to recal her.

It was past eight o'clock when I reached the Gloucester Coffee-house: and, the Bristol Mail being on the point of going off, I mounted on the outside. The fine fluent motion of this Mail soon laid me asleep: it is somewhat remarkable, that the first easy or refreshing sleep which I had enjoyed for some months, was on the outside of a Mail-coach — a bed which, at this day, I find rather an uneasy one. Connected with this sleep was a little incident, which served, as hundreds of others did at that time, to convince me how easily a man who has never been in any great distress, may pass through life without knowing, in his own person at least, anything of the possible goodness of the human heart — or, as I must add with a sigh, of its possible vileness. So thick a curtain of manners is drawn over the features and expression of men's natures, that to the ordinary observer, the two extremities, and the °infinite field of varieties which lie between them, are all confounded — the vast and multitudinous compass of their several harmonies reduced to the meagre outline of differences expressed in the gamut or alphabet of elementary sounds. The case was this: for the first four or five miles from London, I annoyed my fellow-passenger on the roof by occasionally falling against him when the coach gave a lurch to his side; and indeed, if the road had been less smooth and level than it is, I should have fallen off from weakness. Of this annoyance he complained heavily, as perhaps, in the same circumstances most people would; he expressed his complaint, however, more morosely than the occasion seemed to warrant; and, if I had parted with him at that moment, I should have thought of him (if I had considered it worth while to think of him at all) as a surly and almost brutal fellow. However, I was conscious that I had given him some cause for complaint: and, therefore, I apologized to him, and assured him I would do what I could to avoid falling asleep for the future; and, at the same time, in as few words as possible, I explained to him that I was ill and in a weak state from long suffering; and that I could not afford at that time to take an inside place. This man's manner changed, upon hearing this explanation, in an instant: and when I next woke for a minute from the noise and lights of Hounslow (for in spite of my wishes and efforts I had fallen asleep again within two minutes from the time I had spoken to him) I found that he had put his arm round me to protect me from falling off: and for the rest of my journey he behaved to me with the gentleness of a woman, so that, at length, I almost lay in his arms: and this was the more kind, as he could not have known that I was not going the whole way to Bath or Bristol. Unfortunately, indeed, I did go rather farther than I intended: for so genial and refreshing was my sleep, that the next time, after leaving Hounslow that I fully awoke, was upon the sudden pulling up of the Mail (possibly at a Post-office); and, on inquiry, I found that we had reached Maidenhead — six or seven miles, I think, a-head of 5 Salt-hill. Here I alighted: and for the half minute that the Mail stopped, I was entreated by my friendly companion (who, from the transient glimpse I had had of him in Piccadilly, seemed to me to be a gentleman's butler — or person of that rank) to go to bed without 10 delay. This I promised, though with no intention of doing so: and in fact, I immediately set forward, or rather backward, on foot. It must then have been nearly midnight: but so slowly did I creep along, that I heard a clock in a cottage strike four before I turned 15 down the lane from Slough to Eton. The air and the sleep had both refreshed me; but I was weary nevertheless. I remember a thought (obvious enough, and which has been °prettily expressed by a Roman poet) which gave me some consolation at that moment under 20 my poverty. There had been some time before a murder committed on or near Hounslow-heath. I think I cannot be mistaken when I say that the name of the murdered person was Steele, and that he was the owner of a lavender plantation in that neighbourhood. Every 25 step of my progress was bringing me nearer to the

Heath: and it naturally occurred to me that I and the accused murderer, if he were that night abroad, might at every instant be unconsciously approaching each other through the darkness: in which case, said I, — supposing I, instead of being (as indeed I am) little 5 better than an outcast, —

°Lord of my learning and no land beside, were, like my friend, Lord [Altamont], heir by general repute to 70,000*l.* per ann., what a panic should I be under at this moment about my throat! — indeed, 10 it was not likely that Lord [Altamont] should ever be in my situation. But nevertheless, the spirit of the remark remains true — that vast power and possessions make a man shamefully afraid of dying: and I am convinced that many of the most intrepid adven- 15 turers, who, by fortunately being poor, enjoy the full use of their natural courage, would, if at the very instant of going into action news were brought to them that they had unexpectedly succeeded to an estate in England of 50,000*l.* a-year, feel their dislike 20 to bullets considerably sharpened — and their efforts at perfect equanimity and self-possession proportionably difficult. So true it is, in the language of a wise man whose own experience had made him acquainted with both fortunes, that riches are better fitted —

°To slacken virtue, and abate her edge,
Than tempt her to do ought may merit praise.

Parad. Regained.

5 I dally with my subject because, to myself, the remembrance of these times is profoundly interesting. But my reader shall not have any further cause to complain: for I now hasten to its close. — In the road between Slough and Eton, I fell asleep: and,
10 just as the morning began to dawn, I was awakened by the voice of a man standing over me and surveying me. I know not what he was: he was an ill-looking fellow — but not therefore of necessity an ill-meaning fellow: or, if he were, I suppose he thought that no
15 person sleeping out-of-doors in winter could be worth robbing. In which conclusion, however, as it regarded myself, I beg to assure him, if he should be among my readers, that he was mistaken. After a slight remark he passed on: and I was not sorry at 20 his disturbance, as it enabled me to pass through Eton before people were generally up. The night had been heavy and lowering: but towards the morning it had changed to a slight frost: and the ground and the trees were now covered with rime. I slipped through Eton unobserved; washed myself, and, as far as possible, adjusted my dress at a little public-house in Windsor; and about °eight o'clock went down towards °Pote's. On my road I met some junior boys, of whom I made inquiries: an Etonian is always a gentleman; and, in spite of my shabby habiliments, they answered me civilly. My friend, Lord [Altamont], was gone to the University of [Cambridge]. °Ibi omnis effusus labor!' I had, however, other friends at Eton: but it is not to all who wear that name in prosperity that a man is willing to present himself in distress. On recollecting myself, however, I asked for the Earl of D[esart], to whom, (though my acquaintance with him was not so intimate as with some others) I should not have shrunk from presenting myself under any circumstances. He was still at Eton, though I believe on the wing for Cambridge. I called, was received kindly, and asked to breakfast.

Here let me stop for a moment to check my reader from any erroneous conclusions: because I have had occasion incidentally to speak of various patrician friends, it must not be supposed that I have myself any pretention to rank or high blood. I thank God that I have not:—I am the son of a plain English merchant, esteemed during his life for his great integrity, and strongly attached to literary pursuits (indeed, he was °himself, anonymously, an author): if he had lived, it was expected that he would have 5 been very rich; but, dying prematurely, he left no more than about 30,000*l.* amongst seven different claimants. My mother I may mention with honour, as still more highly gifted. For, though unpretending to the name and honours of a literary woman, I shall

10 presume to call her (what many literary women are not) an intellectual woman: and I believe that if ever °her letters should be collected and published, they would be thought generally to exhibit as much strong and masculine sense, delivered in as pure ‘mother
15 English,’ racy and fresh with idiomatic graces, as any in our language — hardly excepting those of °Lady M. W. Montague. — These are my honours of descent: I have no other: and I have thanked God sincerely that I have not, because, in my judgment, a station 20 which raises a man too eminently above the level of his fellow-creatures is not the most favourable to moral, or to intellectual qualities.

Lord D[esart] placed before me a most magnificent breakfast. It was really so; but in my eyes it seemed 25 trebly magnificent — from being the first regular meal, the first "good man's table," that I had sate down to for months. Strange to say, however, I could scarce eat anything. On the day when I first received my 10*l.* Bank-note, I had gone to a baker's shop and bought a couple of rolls: this very shop I had two 5 months or six weeks before surveyed with an eagerness of desire which it was almost humiliating to me to recollect. I remembered °the story about Otway; and feared that there might be danger in eating too rapidly. But I had no need for alarm, my appetite 10 was quite sunk, and I became sick before I had eaten half of what I had bought. This effect from eating what approached to a meal, I continued to feel for weeks: or, when I did not experience any nausea, part of what I ate was rejected, sometimes with 15 acidity, sometimes immediately, and without any acidity. On the present occasion, at Lord D[esart]'s table I found myself not at all better than usual: and, in the midst of luxuries, I had no appetite. I had, however, unfortunately at all times a craving for 20 wine: I explained my situation, therefore, to Lord D[esart], and gave him a short account of my late sufferings, at which he expressed great compassion, and called for wine. This gave me a momentary relief and pleasure; and on all occasions when I had 25 an opportunity, I never failed to drink wine — which I worshipped then as I have since worshipped opium. I am convinced, however, that this indulgence in wine contributed to strengthen my malady; for the 5 tone of my stomach was apparently quite sunk; and by a better regimen it might sooner, and perhaps effectually, have been revived. I hope that it was not from this love of wine that I lingered in the neighbourhood of my Eton friends: I persuaded myself then

10 that it was from reluctance to ask of Lord D[esart], on whom I was conscious I had not sufficient claims, the particular service in quest of which I had come down to Eton. I was, however, unwilling to lose my journey, and — I asked it. Lord D[esart], whose good 15 nature was unbounded, and which, in regard to myself, had been measured rather by his compassion perhaps for my condition, and his knowledge of my intimacy with some of his relatives, than by an over-rigorous inquiry into the extent of my own direct claims, 20 faltered, nevertheless, at this request. He acknowledged that he did not like to have any dealings with money-lenders, and feared lest such a transaction might come to the ears of his connexions. Moreover, he doubted whether his signature, whose expectations sin], would avail with my unchristian friends. However, he did not wish, as it seemed, to mortify me by an absolute refusal: for after a little consideration, he promised, under certain conditions which he pointed out, to give his security. Lord D[esart] was 5 at this time not eighteen years of age: but I have often doubted, on recollecting since the good sense and prudence which on this occasion he mingled with so much urbanity of manner (an urbanity which in him wore the grace of youthful sincerity), whether 10 any statesman — the oldest and the most accomplished in diplomacy — could have acquitted himself better under the same circumstances. Most people, indeed, cannot be addressed on such a business, without surveying you with looks as austere and unpropitious as 15 those of a °Saracen's head.
25 were so much more bounded than those of [his cou-

Recomforted by this promise, which was not quite equal to the best, but far above the worst that I had pictured to myself as possible, I returned in a Windsor coach to London three days after I had quitted it. 20 And now I come to the end of my story: — The Jews did not approve of Lord D[esart]'s terms; whether they would in the end have acceded to them, and were only seeking time for making due inquiries, I know not; but many delays were made — time passed on — the 25 small fragment of my bank note had just melted away ; and before any conclusion could have been put to the business, I must have relapsed into my former state of wretchedness. Suddenly, however, at this crisis, an opening was made, almost by accident, for reconciliation with my friends. I quitted London, in haste, for a remote part of England : after some time, I proceeded to the university ; and it was not until many months had passed away, that I had it in my power again to re-visit the ground which had become so interesting to me, and to this day remains so, as the chief scene of my youthful sufferings.

Meantime, what had become of poor Anne ? For her I have reserved my concluding words : according to our agreement, I sought her daily, and waited for her every night, so long as I staid in London, at the corner of Titchfield-Street. I inquired for her of every one who was likely to know her ; and, during the last hours of my stay in London, I put into activity every means of tracing her that my knowledge of London suggested, and the limited extent of my power made possible. The street where she had lodged I knew, but not the house ; and I remembered at last some account which she had given me of ill treatment from her landlord, which made it probable that she had quitted those lodgings before we parted. She had few acquaintance; most people, besides, thought that the earnestness of my inquiries arose from motives which moved their laughter, or their slight regard; and others, thinking I was in chase of a girl 5 who had robbed me of some trifles, were naturally and excusably indisposed to give me any clue to her, if, indeed they had any to give. Finally, as my despairing resource, on the day I left London I put into the hands of the only person who (I was sure) must 10 know Anne by sight, from having been in company with us once or twice, an address to [the Priory] in [Chester]shire, at that time the residence of my family. But, to this hour, I have never heard a syllable about her. This, amongst such troubles as most men meet 15 with in this life, has been my heaviest affliction. — If she lived, doubtless we must have been sometimes in search of each other, at the very same moment, through the mighty labyrinths of London; perhaps, even within a few feet of each other — a barrier no wider 20 in a London street, often amounting in the end to a separation for eternity! During some years, I hoped that she did live; and I suppose that, in the literal and unrheterical use of the word myriad, I may say that on my different visits to London, I have looked into many, 25 many myriads of female faces, in the hope of meeting her. I should know her again amongst a thousand, if I saw her for a moment; for, though not handsome, she had a sweet expression of countenance, and a 5 peculiar and graceful carriage of the head. — I sought her, I have said, in hope. So it was for years; but now I should fear to see her; and her cough, which grieved me when I parted with her, is now my consolation. I now wish to see her no longer; but think of 10 her more gladly, as one long since laid in the grave; in the grave, I would hope, of a °Magdalen; taken away, before injuries and cruelty had blotted out and transfigured her ingenuous nature, or the brutalities of ruffians had completed the ruin they had begun.°

PART II

So then, Oxford-street, stony-hearted step-mother! thou that listenest to the sighs of orphans, and drikest the tears of children, at length I was dismissed from thee: the time was come at last that I no more should pace in anguish thy never-ending terraces; 5 no more should dream, and wake in captivity to the pangs of hunger. Successors, too many, to myself and Ann, have, doubtless, since then trodden in our footsteps—inheritors of our calamities: other orphans than Ann have sighed: tears have been shed by other 10 children: and thou, Oxford-street, hast since, doubtless, echoed to the groans of innumerable hearts. For myself, however, the storm which I had outlived seemed to have been the pledge of a long fair-weather; the premature sufferings which I had paid down, to 15 have been accepted as a ransom for many years to come, as a price of long immunity from sorrow: and if again I walked in London, a solitary and contemplative man (as oftentimes I did), I walked for the most part in serenity and peace of mind. And, 20

although it is true that the calamities of my noviciate in London had struck root so deeply in my bodily constitution that afterwards they shot up and flourished afresh, and grew into a noxious umbrage that 5 has overshadowed and darkened my latter years, yet these second assaults of suffering were met with a fortitude more confirmed, with the resources of a maturer intellect, and with alleviations from sympathising affection — how deep and tender!

10 Thus, however, with whatsoever alleviations, years that were far asunder were bound together by subtle links of suffering derived from a common root. And herein I notice an instance of the short-sightedness of human desires, that oftentimes on moonlight nights, 15 during my first mournful abode in London, my consolation was (if such it could be thought) to gaze from Oxford-street up every avenue in succession which pierces through the heart of Marylebone to the fields and the woods; for that, said I, travelling with my 20 eyes up the long vistas which lay part in light and part in shade, "that is °the road to the North, and therefore to [Grasmere], and if I had °the wings of a dove, that way I would fly for comfort."² Thus I said, and thus I wished, in my blindness; yet, even in that
25 very northern region it was, even in that very valley,

nay, in °that very house to which my erroneous wishes pointed, that this second birth of my sufferings began; and that they again threatened to besiege the citadel of life and hope. There it was, that for years I was persecuted by visions as ugly, and as ghastly phantoms 5 as ever haunted the couch of an Orestes: and in this unhappier than he, that sleep, which comes to all as a respite and a restoration, and to him especially, as a °blessed balm for his wounded heart and his haunted brain, visited me as my bitterest scourge. Thus blind 10 was I in my desires; yet, if a veil interposes between the dim-sightedness of man and his future calamities, the same veil hides from him their alleviations; and a grief which had not been feared is met by consolations which had not been hoped. I, therefore, who 15 participated, as it were, in the troubles of Orestes (excepting only in his agitated conscience), participated no less in all his supports: my °Eumenides, like his, were at my bed-feet, and stared in upon me through the curtains: but, watching by my pillow, or defraud- 20 ing herself of sleep to bear me company through the heavy watches of the night, sate my Electra: for thou, beloved °M[argaret], dear companion of my later years, thou wast my Electra! and neither in nobility of mind nor in long-suffering affection, wouldst per- 25

mit that a Grecian sister should excel an English wife. For thou thoughtst not much to stoop to humble offices of kindness, and to °servile ministrations of tenderest affection;—to wipe away for years the 5 unwholesome dews upon the forehead, or to refresh the lips when parched and baked with fever; nor, even when thy own peaceful slumbers had by long sympathy become infected with the spectacle of my dread contest with phantoms and shadowy enemies 10 that oftentimes bade me °“sleep no more!”—not even then, didst thou utter a complaint or any murmur, nor withdraw thy angelic smiles, nor shrink from thy service of love more than Electra did of old. For she too, though she was a Grecian woman, and 15 the daughter of the °king of men, yet wept sometimes, and °hid her face in her robe.

But these troubles are past: and thou wilt read these records of a period so dolorous to us both as the legend of some hideous dream that can return no 20 more. Meantime, I am again in London: and again I pace the terraces of Oxford-street by night: and oftentimes, when I am oppressed by anxieties that demand all my philosophy and the comfort of thy presence to support, and yet remember that I am 25 separated from thee by three hundred miles, and the length of three dreary months, — I look up the streets that run northwards from Oxford-street, upon moonlight nights, and recollect my youthful ejaculation of anguish; — and remembering that thou art sitting alone in that same valley, and mistress of that very 5 house to which my heart turned in its blindness nineteen years ago, I think that, though blind indeed, and scattered to the winds of late, the promptings of my heart may yet have had reference to a remoter time, and may be justified if read in another meaning:— 10 and, if I could allow myself to descend again to the impotent wishes of childhood, I should again say to myself, as I look to the north, “Oh, that I had the wings of a dove ——” and with how just a confidence in thy good and gracious nature might I add the other 15 half of my early ejaculation — “And that way I would fly for comfort.”

THE PLEASURES OF OPIUM

It is so long since I first took opium, that if it had been a trifling incident in my life, I might have forgotten its date: but cardinal events are not to be 20 forgotten; and from circumstances connected with it, I remember that it must be referred to the autumn of 1804. During that season I was in London, having come thither for the first time since my entrance at college. And my introduction to opium arose in the following way. From an early age I had been accustomed to wash my head in cold water at least once a day: being suddenly seized with tooth-ache I attributed it to some relaxation caused by an accidental intermission of that practice; jumped out of bed; plunged my head into a bason of cold water; and with hair thus wetted went to sleep. The next morning, as I need hardly say, I awoke with excruciating rheumatic pains of the head and face, from which I had hardly any respite for about twenty days. On the twenty-first day, I think it was, and on a Sunday, that I went out into the streets; rather to run away, if possible, from my torments, than with any distinct purpose. By accident I met a college acquaintance who recommended opium. Opium! dread agent of unimaginable pleasure and pain! I had heard of it as I had of manna or of Ambrosia, but no further: how unmeaning a sound was it at that time! what solemn chords does it now strike upon my heart! what heart-quaking vibrations of sad and happy remembrances! Reverting for a moment to these, I feel a mystic importance attached to the minutest circumstances connected with the place and the time, and the man (if man he was) that first laid open to me the Paradise of Opium-eaters. It was a Sunday afternoon, wet and cheerless: and a duller spectacle this earth of ours has not to show than a rainy Sunday in 5 London. My road homewards lay through Oxford-street; and near °“the stately Pantheon,” (as Mr. Wordsworth has obligingly called it) I saw a druggist’s shop. The druggist—unconscious minister of 10 celestial pleasures!—as if in sympathy with the rainy Sunday, looked dull and stupid, just as any mortal druggist might be expected to look on a Sunday: and when I asked for the tincture of opium, he gave it to me as any other man might do: and furthermore, out of my shilling, returned me what seemed to be real 15 copper halfpence, taken out of a real wooden drawer. Nevertheless, in spite of such indications of humanity, he has ever since existed in my mind as the beatific vision of an immortal druggist, sent down to earth on a special mission to myself. And it confirms me in 20 this way of considering him, that, when I next came up to London, I sought him near the stately Pantheon, and found him not: and thus to me, who knew not his name (if indeed he had one) he seemed rather to have vanished from Oxford-street than to have re- 25 moved in any bodily fashion. The reader may choose to think of him as, possibly, no more than a sublunary druggist: it may be so: but my faith is better: I believe him to have °evanesced, or evaporated. So 5 unwillingly would I connect any mortal remembrances with that hour, and place, and creature, that first brought me acquainted with the celestial drug.

Arrived at my lodgings, it may be supposed that I lost not a moment in taking the quantity prescribed.
 10 I was necessarily ignorant of the whole art and mystery of opium-taking: and, what I took, I took under every disadvantage. But I took it:—and in an hour, oh! Heavens! what a revulsion! what an upheaving, from its lowest depths, of the inner spirit! what an 15 apocalypse of the world within me! That my pains had vanished, was now a trifle in my eyes:—this negative effect was swallowed up in the immensity of those positive effects which had opened before me—in the abyss of divine enjoyment thus suddenly revealed.
 20 Here was a panacea—a °φάρμακον νήπενθες for all human woes: here was the secret of happiness, about which philosophers had disputed for so many ages, at once discovered: happiness might now be bought for a penny, and carried in the waistcoat pocket:
 25 portable ecstasies might be had corked up in a pint bottle: and peace of mind could be sent down in gallons by the mail coach. But, if I talk in this way, the reader will think I am laughing: and I can assure him, that nobody will laugh long who deals much with opium: its pleasures even are of a grave and solemn 5 complexion; and in his happiest state, the opium-eater cannot present himself in the character of °V Allegro: even then, he speaks and thinks as becomes °Il Penseroso. Nevertheless, I have a very reprehensible way of jesting at times in the midst of my own misery: 10 and, unless when I am checked by some more powerful feelings, I am afraid I shall be guilty of this indecent practice even in these annals of suffering or enjoyment. The reader must allow a little to my infirm nature in this respect: and with a few indul- 15 gences of that sort, I shall endeavour to be as grave, if not drowsy, as fits a theme like opium, so anti-mercurial as it really is, and so drowsy as it is falsely reputed.

And, first, one word with respect to its bodily effects: 20 for upon all that has been hitherto written on the subject of opium, whether by travellers in Turkey (who may plead their privilege of lying as an old immemorial right), or by professors of medicine, writing °ex cathedra, — I have but one emphatic criticism to 25 pronounce — Lies! lies! lies! I remember once, in passing a book-stall, to have caught these words from a page of some satiric author: — “By this time I became convinced that the London newspapers spoke truth at least twice a week, viz. on Tuesday and Saturday, and might safely be depended upon for — the list of bankrupts.” In like manner, I do by no means deny that some truths have been delivered to the world in regard to opium: thus it has been repeatedly affirmed by the learned, that opium is a dusky brown in colour; and this, take notice, I grant: secondly, that it is rather dear, which also I grant: for in my time East-India opium has been three guineas a pound, and Turkey eight: and, thirdly, that if you eat a good deal of it, most probably you must — do what is particularly disagreeable to any man of regular habits, viz. °die. These weighty propositions are, all and singular, true: I cannot gainsay them: and truth ever was, and will be, commendable. But in these three theorems, I believe we have exhausted the stock of knowledge as yet accumulated by men on the subject of opium. And therefore, worthy doctors, as there seems to be room for further discoveries, stand aside, and allow me to come forward and lecture on this matter.

First, then, it is not so much affirmed as taken for granted, by all who ever mention opium, formally or incidentally, that it does, or can, produce intoxication. Now, reader, assure yourself, o meo periculo, that no quantity of opium ever did, or could intoxicate. As to the tincture of opium (commonly called laudanum) that might certainly intoxicate if a man could bear to take enough of it; but why? because it contains so much proof spirit, and not because it contains so much opium. But crude opium, I affirm peremptorily, is incapable of producing any state of body at all resembling that which is produced by alcohol; and not in degree only incapable, but even in kind: it is not in the quantity of its effects merely, but in the quality, that it differs altogether. The pleasure given by wine is always mounting, and tending to a crisis, after which it declines: that from opium, when once generated, is stationary for eight or ten hours: the first, to borrow a technical distinction from medicine, is a case of acute—the second, of chronic pleasure: the one is a flame, the other a steady and equable glow. But the main distinction lies in this, that whereas wine disorders the mental faculties, opium, on the contrary (if taken in a proper manner), introduces amongst them the most exquisite order, legislation, and harmony. Wine robs a man of his self-possession: opium greatly invigorates

it. Wine unsettles and clouds the judgment, and gives a preternatural brightness, and a vivid exaltation to the contempts and the admirations, the loves and the hatreds, of the drinker: opium, on the contrary, communicates serenity and equipoise to all the faculties, active or passive: and with respect to the temper and moral feelings in general, it gives simply that sort of vital warmth which is approved by the judgment, and which would probably always accompany a bodily constitution of primeval or antediluvian health. Thus, for instance, opium, like wine, gives an expansion to the heart and the benevolent affections: but then, with this remarkable difference, that in the sudden development of kind-heartedness which accompanies inebriation, there is always more or less of a maudlin character, which exposes it to the contempt of the by-stander. Men shake hands, swear eternal friendship, and shed tears — no mortal knows why: and the sensual creature is clearly uppermost. But the expansion of the benigner feelings, incident to opium, is no febrile access, but a healthy restoration to that state which the mind would naturally recover upon the removal of any deep-seated irritation of pain that had disturbed and quarrelled with the impulses of a heart originally just and good. True it is, that even wine, up to a certain point, and with certain men, rather tends to exalt and to steady the intellect: I myself, who have never been a great wine-drinker, used to find that half a dozen glasses of wine advantageously affected the faculties — brightened and intensified the consciousness — and gave to the mind a feeling of being “ponderibus librata suis:” and certainly it is most absurdly said, in popular language, of any man, that he is disguised in liquor: for, on the contrary, most men are disguised by sobriety; and it is when they are drinking (as some old gentleman says in °Athenæus), that men ἐαυτοὺς ἐμφανίζουσιν ὅτινες εἰσὶν — display themselves in their true complexion of character; which surely is not disguising themselves. But still, wine constantly leads a man to the brink of absurdity and extravagance; and, beyond a certain point, it is sure to volatilize and to disperse the intellectual energies: whereas opium always seems to compose what had been agitated, and to concentrate what had been distracted. In short, to sum up all in one word, a man who is inebriated, or tending to inebriation, is, and feels that he is, in a condition which calls up into supremacy the merely human, too often the brutal, part of his nature: but the opium-eater (I speak of him who is not suffering from any disease, or other remote effects of opium) feels that the diviner part of his nature is paramount; that is, the moral affections are in a state of cloudless serenity; and over all is the great light of the majestic intellect.

This is the doctrine of the true church on the subject of opium: of which church I acknowledge myself to be the only member — the alpha and the omega: but then it is to be recollected, that I speak from the ground of a large and profound personal experience: whereas most of the °unscientific authors who have at all treated of opium, and even of those who have written expressly on the materia medica, make it evident, from the horror they express of it, that their experimental knowledge of its action is none at all. I will, however, candidly acknowledge that I have met with one person who bore evidence to its intoxicating power, such as staggered my own incredulity: for he was a surgeon, and had himself taken opium largely. I happened to say to him, that his enemies (as I had heard) charged him with talking nonsense on politics, and that his friends apologized for him, by suggesting that he was constantly in a state of intoxication from opium. Now the accusation, said I, is not °primâ facie, and of necessity, an absurd one: but the defence is. To my surprise, however, he insisted that both his enemies and his friends were in the right: "I will maintain," said he, "that I do talk nonsense; and secondly, I will maintain that I do not talk nonsense upon principle, or with any view to profit, but solely and simply, said he, solely and simply, — solely and simply (repeating it three times 5 over), because I am drunk with opium; and that daily." I replied that, as to the allegation of his enemies, as it seemed to be established upon such respectable testimony, seeing that the three parties concerned all agree in it, it did not become me to 10 question it; but the defence set up I must demur to. He proceeded to discuss the matter, and to lay down his reasons: but it seemed to me so impolite to pursue an argument which must have presumed a man mistaken in a point belonging to his own profession, 15 that I did not press him even when his course of argument seemed open to objection: not to mention that a man who talks nonsense, even though "with no view to profit," is not altogether the most agreeable partner in a dispute, whether as opponent or respon- 20 dent. I confess, however, that the authority of a surgeon, and one who was reputed a good one, may seem a weighty one to my prejudice: but still I must plead my experience, which was greater than his greatest by 7000 drops a day; and, though it was not 25 possible to suppose a medical man unacquainted with the characteristic symptoms of vinous intoxication, it yet struck me that he might proceed on a logical error of using the word intoxication with too great 5 latitude, and extending it generically to all modes of nervous excitement, instead of restricting it as the expression for a specific sort of excitement, connected with certain diagnostics. Some people have maintained in my hearing, that they had been drunk upon 10 green tea : and a medical student in London, for whose knowledge in his profession I have reason to feel great respect, assured me, the other day, that a patient, in recovering from an illness, had got drunk on a beef-steak.

Having dwelt so much on this first and leading error,
15 in respect to opium, I shall notice very briefly a second and a third ; which are, that the elevation of spirits produced by opium is necessarily followed by a proportionate depression, and that the natural and even immediate consequence of opium is torpor and stagna-20 tion, animal and mental. The first of these errors I shall content myself with simply denying ; assuring my reader, that for ten years, during which I took opium at intervals, the day succeeding to that on which I allowed myself this luxury was always a day of 25 unusually good spirits.

°With respect to the torpor supposed to follow, or rather (if we were to credit the numerous pictures of Turkish opium-eaters) to accompany the practice of opium-eating, I deny that also. Certainly, opium is classed under the head of narcotics; and some such 5 effect it may produce in the end: but the primary effects of opium are always, and in the highest degree, to excite and stimulate the system: this first stage of its action always lasted with me, during my noviciate, for upwards of eight hours; so that it must be the 10 fault of the opium-eater himself if he does not so time his °exhibition of the dose (to speak medically) as that the whole weight of its narcotic influence may descend upon his sleep. Turkish opium-eaters, it seems, are absurd enough to sit, like so many equestrian statues, 15 on logs of wood as stupid as themselves. But that the reader may judge of the degree in which opium is likely to stupify the faculties of an Englishman, I shall (by way of treating the question illustratively, rather than argumentatively) describe the way in 20 which I myself often passed an opium evening in London, during the period between 1804–1812. It will be seen, that at least opium did not move me to seek solitude, and much less to seek inactivity, or the torpid state of self-involution ascribed to the 25

Turks. I give this account at the risk of being pronounced a crazy enthusiast or visionary: but I regard that little: I must desire my reader to bear in mind, that I was a hard student, and at severe studies for 5 all the rest of my time: and certainly I had a right occasionally to relaxations as well as other people: these, however, I allowed myself but seldom.

The late Duke of [Norfolk] used to say, "Next Friday, by the blessing of Heaven, I purpose to be 10 drunk:" and in like manner I used to fix beforehand how often, within a given time, and when, I would commit a debauch of opium. This was seldom more than once in three weeks: for at that time I could not have ventured to call every day (as I did afterwards)
15 for "a glass of laudanum negus, warm, and without sugar." No: as I have said, I seldom drank laudanum, at that time, more than once in three weeks: this was usually on a Tuesday or a Saturday night; my reason for which was this. In those days °Grasini sang at the Opera: and her voice was delightful 20 to me beyond all that I had ever heard. I know not what may be the state of the Opera-house now, having never been within its walls for seven or eight years, but at that time it was by much the most pleasant 25 place of public resort in London for passing an evening. Five shillings admitted one to the gallery, which was subject to far less annoyance than the pit of the theatres: the orchestra was distinguished by its sweet and melodious grandeur from all English orchestras, the composition of which, I confess, is not acceptable to my ear, from the predominance of the clamorous instruments, and the absolute tyranny of the violin. The choruses were divine to hear: and when Grassini appeared in some interlude, as she often did, and poured forth her passionate soul as °Andromache, at the tomb of Hector, &c. I question whether any Turk, of all that ever entered the Paradise of opium-eaters, can have had half the pleasure I had. But, indeed, I honour the Barbarians too much by supposing them capable of any pleasures approaching to the intellectual ones of an Englishman. For music is an intellectual or a sensual pleasure, according to the temperament of him who hears it. And, by the bye, with the exception of °the fine extravaganza on that subject in Twelfth Night, I do not recollect more than one thing said adequately on the subject of music in all literature: it is a °passage in the Religio Medici of Sir T. Brown; and, though chiefly remarkable for its sublimity, has also a philosophic value, inasmuch as it points to the true theory of musical effects. The mistake of most people is to suppose that it is by the ear they communicate with music, and, therefore, that they are purely passive to its effects. But this is not so: it is by the re-action of 5 the mind upon the notices of the ear, (the matter coming by the senses, the form from the mind) that the pleasure is constructed: and therefore it is that people of equally good ear differ so much in this point from one another. Now opium, by greatly increasing

10 the activity of the mind generally, increases, of necessity, that particular mode of its activity by which we are able to construct out of the raw material of organic sound an elaborate intellectual pleasure. But, says a 15 friend, a succession of musical sounds is to me like a collection of Arabic characters: I can attach no ideas to them. Ideas! my good sir? there is no occasion for them: all that class of ideas, which can be available in such a case, has a language of representative feelings. °But this is a subject foreign to my present
20 purposes: it is sufficient to say, that a chorus, &c. of elaborate harmony, displayed before me, as in a piece of arras work, the whole of my past life — not, as if recalled by an act of memory, but as if present and incarnated in the music: no longer painful to dwell 25 upon: but the detail of its incidents removed, or blended in some hazy abstraction; and its passions exalted, spiritualized, and sublimed. All this was to be had for five shillings. And over and above the music of the stage and the orchestra, I had all around me, in the intervals of the performance, the music of the Italian language talked by Italian women: for the gallery was usually crowded with Italians: and I listened with a pleasure such as that with which °Weld the traveller lay and listened, in Canada, to the sweet laughter of Indian women; for the less you understand of a language, the more sensible you are to the melody or harshness of its sounds: for such a purpose, therefore, it was an advantage to me that I was a poor Italian scholar, reading it but little, and not speaking it at all, nor understanding a tenth part of what I heard spoken.

These were my Opera pleasures: but another pleasure I had which, as it could be had only on a Saturday night, occasionally struggled with my love of the Opera; for, at that time, Tuesday and Saturday were the regular Opera nights. On this subject I am afraid I shall be rather obscure, but, I can assure the reader, not at all more so than °Marinus in his life of °Proclus, or many other biographers and auto-biographers of fair reputation. This pleasure, I have said, was to be had only on a Saturday night. What then was Saturday night to me more than any other night? I had no labours that I rested from; no wages to receive: what needed I to care for Saturday night, more than 5 as it was a summons to hear Grassini? True, most logical reader: what you say is unanswerable. And yet so it was and is, that, whereas different men throw their feelings into different channels, and most are apt to show their interest in the concerns of the poor,

10 chiefly by sympathy, expressed in some shape or other, with their distresses and sorrows, I, at that time, was disposed to express my interest by sympathising with their pleasures. The pains of poverty I had lately seen too much of; more than I wished to remember:
15 but the pleasures of the poor, their consolations of spirit, and their reposes from bodily toil, can never become oppressive to contemplate. Now Saturday night is the season for the chief, regular, and periodic return of rest to the poor: in this point the most hostile 20 sects unite, and acknowledge a common link of brotherhood: almost all Christendom rests from its labours. It is a rest introductory to another rest: and divided by a whole day and two nights from the renewal of toil. On this account I feel always, on a 25 Saturday night, as though I also were released from some yoke of labour, had some wages to receive, and some luxury of repose to enjoy. For the sake, therefore, of witnessing, upon as large a scale as possible, a spectacle with which my sympathy was so entire, I used often, on Saturday nights, after I had taken 5 opium, to wander forth, without much regarding the direction or the distance, to all the markets, and other parts of London, to which the poor resort on a Saturday night, for laying out their wages. Many a family party, consisting of a man, his wife, and sometimes 10 one or two of his children, have I listened to, as they stood consulting on their ways and means, or the strength of their exchequer, or the price of household articles. Gradually I became familiar with their wishes, their difficulties, and their opinions. Some- 15 times there might be heard murmurs of discontent: but far oftener expressions on the countenance, or uttered in words, of patience, hope, and tranquillity. And taken generally, I must say, that, in this point at least, the poor are far more philosophic than the rich 20 — that they show a more ready and cheerful submission to what they consider as irremediable evils, or irreparable losses. Whenever I saw occasion, or could do it without appearing to be intrusive, I joined their parties; and gave my opinion upon the matter in dis- 25 cussion, which, if not always judicious, was always received indulgently. If wages were a little higher, or expected to be so, or the quartern loaf a little lower, or it was reported that onions and butter were 5 expected to fall, I was glad: yet, if the contrary were true, I drew from opium some means of consoling myself. For opium (like the bee, that extracts its materials indiscriminately from roses and from the °soot of chimneys) can overrule all feelings into compliance with the master key. Some of these rambles

10 led me to great distances: for an opium-eater is too happy to observe the motion of time. And sometimes in my attempts to steer homewards, upon nautical principles, by fixing my eye on the pole-star, and seeking ambitiously for a north-west passage, instead of 15 circumnavigating all the capes and head-lands I had doubled in my outward voyage, I came suddenly upon such knotty problems of alleys, such enigmatical entries, and such sphynx's riddles of streets without thoroughfares, as must, I conceive, baffle the audacity of porters, and confound the intellects of 20 hackney-coachmen. I could almost have believed, at times, that I must be the first discoverer of some of these °terræ incognitæ, and doubted, whether they had 25 yet been laid down in the modern charts of London.

For all this, however, I paid a heavy price in distant years, when the human face tyrannized over my dreams, and the perplexities of my steps in London came back and haunted my sleep, with the feeling of perplexities moral or intellectual, that brought confusion to the reason, or anguish and remorse to the conscience. 5

Thus I have shown that opium does not, of necessity, produce inactivity or torpor; but that, on the contrary, it often led me into markets and theatres. 10
Yet, in candour, I will admit that markets and theatres are not the appropriate haunts of the opium-eater, when in the divinest state incident to his enjoyment. In that state, crowds become an oppression to him; music even, too sensual and gross. He naturally seeks 15 solitude and silence, as indispensable conditions of those trances, or profoundest reveries, which are the crown and consummation of what opium can do for human nature. I, whose disease it was to meditate too much, and to observe too little, and who, upon my 20 first entrance at college, was nearly falling into a deep melancholy, from brooding too much on the sufferings which I had witnessed in London, was sufficiently aware of the tendencies of my own thoughts to do all I could to counteract them. — I was, indeed, 25

like a person who, according to the old legend, had entered the °cave of Trophonius: and the remedies I sought were to force myself into society, and to keep my understanding in continual activity upon matters 5 of science. But for these remedies, I should certainly have become hypochondriacally melancholy. In after years, however, when my cheerfulness was more fully re-established, I yielded to my natural inclination for a solitary life. And, at that time, I often fell into 10 these reveries upon taking opium; and more than once it has happened to me, on a summer night, when I have been at an open window, in a room from which I could overlook the sea at a mile below me, and could command a view of the great town of L[iverpool], at 15 about the same distance, that I have sate from sun-set to sun-rise, motionless, and without wishing to move.

I shall be charged with °mysticism, °Behmenism, °quietism, &c. but that shall not alarm me. °Sir H. Vane, the younger, was one of our wisest men: and 20 let my reader see if he, in his philosophical works, be half as unmystical as I am. — I say, then, that it has often struck me that the scene itself was somewhat typical of what took place in such a reverie. The town of L[iverpool] represented the earth, with its 25 sorrows and its graves left behind, yet not out of sight, nor wholly forgotten. The ocean, in everlasting but gentle agitation, and brooded over by a dove-like calm, might not unfitly typify the mind and the mood which then swayed it. For it seemed to me as if then first I stood at a distance, and aloof from the uproar 5 of life; as if the °tumult, the fever, and the strife, were suspended; a respite granted from the secret burthens of the heart; a sabbath of repose; a °resting from human labours. Here were the hopes which blossom in the paths of life, reconciled with the peace 10 which is in the grave; motions of the intellect as unwearied as the heavens, yet for all anxieties a halcyon calm: a tranquillity that seemed no product of inertia, but as if resulting from mighty and equal antagonisms; infinite activities, infinite repose. 15

°Oh! just, subtle, and mighty opium! that to the hearts of poor and rich alike, for the wounds that will never heal, and for °“the pangs that tempt the spirit to rebel,” bringest an assuaging balm; eloquent opium! that with thy potent rhetoric stealest away the pur- 20 poses of wrath; and to the guilty man, for one night givest back the hopes of his youth, and hands washed pure from blood; and to the proud man, a brief oblivion for that summonest to the chancery of dreams, for the triumphs of suffering innocence, false witnesses; and confoundest perjury; and dost reverse the sentences of unrighteous judges:—thou buildest upon the bosom

°Wrongs unredress'd, and insults unavenged;

25

 5 of darkness, out of the fantastic imagery of the brain, cities and temples beyond the art of °Phidias and °Praxiteles—beyond the splendour of Babylon and °Hekatómpylos: and °“from the anarchy of dreaming sleep,” callest into sunny light the faces of long-buried 10 beauties, and the blessed household countenances cleansed from the °“dishonours of the grave.” Thou only givest these gifts to man; and thou hast the keys of Paradise, oh, just, subtle, and mighty opium!

INTRODUCTION TO THE PAINS OF OPIUM

Courteous, and, I hope, indulgent reader (for all 15 my readers must be indulgent ones, or else, I fear, I shall shock them too much to count on their courtesy), having accompanied me thus far, now let me request you to move onwards, for about eight years; that is to say, from 1804 (when I have said that my 20 acquaintance with opium first began) to 1812. The years of academic life are now over and gone—almost forgotten:—the student’s cap no longer presses my temples; if my cap exist at all, it presses those of some youthful scholar, I trust, as happy as myself, and as passionate a lover of knowledge. My gown is, by this time, I dare to say, in the same condition with many thousand excellent books in the °Bodleian, 5 viz. diligently perused by certain studious moths and worms: or departed, however (which is all that I know of his fate), to that great reservoir of somewhere, to which all the tea-cups, tea-caddies, tea-pots, tea-kettles, &c. have departed (not to speak of still frailer 10 vessels, such as glasses, decanters, bed-makers, &c. which occasional resemblances in the present generation of tea-cups, &c. remind me of having once possessed, but of whose departure and final fate I, in common with most gownsmen of either university, 15 could give, I suspect, but an obscure and conjectural history. The persecutions of the chapel-bell, sounding its unwelcome summons to six o'clock matins, interrupts my slumbers no longer: the porter who rang-it, upon whose beautiful nose (bronze, inlaid 20 with copper) I wrote, in retaliation, so many °Greek epigrams whilst I was dressing, is dead, and has ceased to disturb anybody: and I, and many others, who suffered much from his tintinnabulous propensities, have now agreed to overlook his errors, and 25 have forgiven him. Even with the bell I am now in charity: it rings, I suppose, as formerly, thrice a-day: and cruelly annoys, I doubt not, many worthy gentlemen, and disturbs their peace of mind: but as to me, 5 in this year 1812, I regard its treacherous voice no longer (treacherous, I call it, for, by some refinement of malice, it spoke in assweet and silvery tones as if it had been inviting one to a party): its tones have no longer, indeed, power to reach me, let the wind sit 10 as favourable as the malice of the bell itself could wish: for I am 250 miles away from it, and buried in the depth of mountains. And what am I doing amongst the mountains? Taking opium. Yes, but what else? Why, reader, in 1812, the year we are now arrived at, 15 as well as for some years previous, I have been chiefly studying German metaphysics, in the writings of °Kant, °Fichte, °Schelling, &c. And how, and in what manner, do I live? in short, what class or description of men do I belong to? I am at this period, viz. in 1812, 20 living in a cottage; and with a single female servant °(honi soit qui mal y pense), who, amongst my neighbours, passes by the name of my "house-keeper." And, as a scholar and a man of learned education, and in that sense a gentleman, I may presume to 25 class myself as an unworthy member of that indefinite body called gentlemen. Partly on the ground I have assigned, perhaps; partly because, from my having no visible calling or business, it is rightly judged that I must be living on my private fortune; I am so classed by my neighbours: and, by the courtesy 5 of modern England, I am usually addressed on letters, &c. esquire, though having, I fear, in the rigorous construction of heralds, but slender pretensions to that distinguished honour: yes, in popular estimation, I am °X. Y. Z., esquire, but not Justice of the Peace, 10 nor °Custos Rotulorum. Am I married? Not yet. And I still take opium? On Saturday nights. And, perhaps, have taken it unblushingly ever since “the rainy Sunday,” and “the stately Pantheon,” and “the beatific druggist” of 1804? — Even so. And how do 15 I find my health after all this opium-eating? in short, how do I do? Why, pretty well, I thank you, reader: in the phrase of ladies in the straw, “as well as can be expected.” In fact, if I dared to say the real and simple truth, though, to satisfy the theories 20 of medical men, I ought to be ill, I never was better in my life than in the spring of 1812; and I hope sincerely, that the quantity of claret, port, or “particular Madeira,” which, in all probability, you, good reader, have taken, and design to take for every term of eight 25 years, during your natural life, may as little disorder your health as mine was disordered by the opium I had taken for eight years, between 1804 and 1812. Hence you may see again the danger of taking any 5 medical advice from Anastasius; in divinity, for aught I know, or law, he may be a safe counsellor; but not in medicine. No: it is far better to consult Dr. Buchan; as I did: for I never forgot that worthy man's excellent suggestion: and I was "particularly 10 careful not to take above five-and-twenty ounces of laudanum." To this moderation and temperate use of the article, I may ascribe it, I suppose, that as yet, at least (i.e. in 1812,) I am ignorant and unsuspecting of the avenging terrors which opium has in store for 15 those who abuse its lenity. At the same time, it must not be forgotten, that hitherto I have been only a dilettante eater of opium: eight years' practice even, with a single precaution of allowing sufficient intervals between every indulgence, has not been sufficient to 20 make opium necessary to me as an article of daily diet. But now comes a different era. Move on, if you please, reader, to 1813. In the summer of the year we have just quitted, I had suffered much in bodily health from °distress of mind connected with related to the subject now before me, further than through the bodily illness which it produced, I need not more particularly notice. Whether this illness of 1812 had any share in that of 1813, I know not: but so it was, that in the latter year I was attacked by a most °appalling irritation of the stomach, in all respects the same as that which had caused me so much suffering in youth, and accompanied by a revival of all the old dreams. This is the point of my narrative on which, as respects my own self-justification, the whole of what follows may be said to hinge. And here I find myself in a perplexing dilemma: — Either, on the one hand, I must exhaust the reader's patience, by such a detail of my malady, or of my struggles with it, as might suffice to establish the fact of my inability to wrestle any longer with irritation and constant suffering: or, on the other hand, by passing lightly over this critical part of my story, I must forego the benefit of a stronger impression left on the mind of the reader, and must lay myself open to the misconception of having slipped by the easy and gradual steps of self-indulging persons, from the first to the final stage of opium-eating (a misconception to which there will be a lurking predisposition in most readers, from my previous acknowledgements).

25 a very melancholy event. This event, being no ways

This is the dilemma: the first horn of which would be sufficient to toss and gore any column of patient readers, though drawn up sixteen deep and constantly relieved by fresh men: consequently that is not to be 5 thought of. It remains, then, that I postulate so much as is necessary for my purpose. And let me take as full credit for what I postulate as if I had demonstrated it, good reader, at the expense of your patience and my own. Be not so ungenerous as to let me suffer
10 in your good opinion through my own forbearance and regard for your comfort. No: believe all that I ask of you, viz. that I could resist no longer, believe it liberally, and as an act of grace: or else in mere prudence: for, if not, then in the next edition of my 15 Opium Confessions revised and enlarged, I will make you believe and tremble: and °à force d'ennuyer, by mere dint of °pandiculation I will terrify all readers of mine from ever again questioning any postulate that I shall think fit to make.

20 This then, let me repeat, I postulate — that, at the time I began to take opium daily, I could not have done otherwise. Whether, indeed, afterwards I might not have succeeded in breaking off the habit, even when it seemed to me that all efforts would be unavailing, 25 and whether many of the innumerable efforts which I did make, might not have been carried much further and my gradual reconquests of ground lost might not have been followed up much more energetically — these are questions which I must decline. Perhaps I might make out a case of palliation; but, shall I speak 5 ingenuously? I confess it, as a besetting infirmity of mine, that I am too much of an °Eudæmonist: I hanker too much after a state of happiness, both for myself and others: I cannot face misery, whether my own or not, with an eye of sufficient firmness: and am 10 little capable of encountering present pain for the sake of any reversionary benefit. On some other matters, I can agree with the gentlemen in the cotton trade at Manchester in affecting the °Stoic philosophy: but not in this. Here I take the liberty of an °Eclectic 15 philosopher, and I look out for some courteous and considerate sect that will condescend more to the infirm condition of an opium-eater; that are °‘sweet men,’ as Chaucer says, ‘to give absolution,’ and will show some conscience in the penances they inflict, 20 and the efforts of abstinence they exact, from poor sinners like myself. An inhuman moralist I can no more endure in my nervous state than opium that has not been boiled. At any rate, he, who summons me to send out a large freight of self-denial and mortifi- 25 cation upon any cruising voyage of moral improvement, must make it clear to my understanding that the concern is a hopeful one. At my time of life (six-and-thirty years of age) it cannot be supposed that I 5 have much energy to spare: in fact, I find it all little enough for the intellectual labours I have on my hands: and, therefore, let no man expect to frighten me by a few hard words into embarking any part of it upon desperate adventures of morality.

10 Whether desperate or not, however, the issue of the struggle in 1813 was what I have mentioned; and from this date, the reader is to consider me as a regular and confirmed opium-eater, of whom to ask whether on any particular day he had or had not taken opium, would 15 be to ask whether his lungs had performed respiration, or the heart fulfilled its functions. — You understand now, reader, what I am: and you are by this time aware, that no old gentleman, “with a snow-white beard,” will have any chance of persuading me to 20 surrender “the little golden receptacle of the pernicious drug.” No: I give notice to all, whether moralists or surgeons, that, whatever be their pretensions and skill in their respective lines of practice, they must not hope for any countenance from me, if they
25 think to begin by any savage proposition for a Lent

or Ramadan of abstinence from opium. This then being all fully understood between us, we shall in future sail before the wind. Now then, reader, from 1813, where all this time we have been sitting down and loitering — rise up, if you please, and walk forward about three years more. Now draw up the curtain, and you shall see me in a new character. 5

If any man, poor or rich, were to say that he would tell us what had been the happiest day in his life, and the why, and the wherefore, I suppose that we should all cry out — Hear him ! Hear him ! — As to the happiest day, that must be very difficult for any wise man to name : because any event, that could occupy so distinguished a place in a man's retrospect of his life, or be entitled to have shed a special felicity on any one day, ought to be of such an enduring character, as that (accidents apart) it should have continued to shed the same felicity, or one not distinguishably less, on many years together. To the happiest lustrum, however, or even to the happiest year, it may be allowed to any man to point without discountenance from wisdom. This year, in my case, reader, was the one which we have now reached ; though it stood, I confess, as a parenthesis between years of a gloomier character. It was a year of brilliant water (to speak 15 20 25 after the manner of jewellers), set as it were, and insulated, in the gloom and cloudy melancholy of opium. Strange as it may sound, I had a little before this time descended suddenly, and without any considerable effort, from 320 grains of opium (i.e. eight thousand drops of laudanum) per day, to forty grains, or one eighth part. Instantaneously, and as if by magic, the cloud of profoundest melancholy which rested upon my brain, like some black vapours that I have seen roll away from the summits of mountains, drew off in one day ^ο(νυχθημερον); passed off with its murky banners as simultaneously as a ship that has been stranded, and is floated off by a spring tide—

^οThat moveth altogether, if it move at all.

Now, then, I was again happy: I now took only 1000 drops of laudanum per day: and what was that? A latter spring had come to close up the season of youth: my brain performed its functions as healthily as ever before: I read Kant again; and again I understood him, or fancied that I did. Again my feelings of pleasure expanded themselves to all around me: and if any man from Oxford or Cambridge, or from neither, had been announced to me in my unpretending cottage, I should have welcomed him with as sumptuous a reception as so poor a man could offer. Whatever else was wanting to a wise man's happiness, — of laudanum I would have given him as much as he wished, and in a golden cup. And, by the way, now that I speak of giving laudanum away, I remember, 5 about this time, a little incident, which I mention, because, trifling as it was, the reader will soon meet it again in my dreams, which it influenced more fearfully than could be imagined. One day a Malay knocked at my door. What business a Malay could 10 have to transact amongst English mountains, I cannot conjecture: but possibly he was on his road to a seaport about forty miles distant.

The servant who opened the door to him was a young girl born and bred amongst the mountains, who 15 had never seen an Asiatic dress of any sort: his turban, therefore, confounded her not a little: and, as it turned out, that his attainments in English were exactly of the same extent as hers in the Malay, there seemed to be an °impassable gulph fixed between all 20 communication of ideas, if either party had happened to possess any. In this dilemma, the girl, recollecting the reputed learning of her master (and, doubtless, giving me credit for a knowledge of all the languages of the earth, besides, perhaps, a few of the lunar ones), 25 came and gave me to understand that there was a sort of demon below, whom she clearly imagined that my art could exorcise from the house. I did not immediately go down: but, when I did, the group which presented itself, arranged as it was by accident, though not very elaborate, took hold of my fancy and my eye in a way that none of the statuesque attitudes exhibited in the ballets at the Opera House, though so ostentatiously complex, had ever done. In a cottage kitchen, but panelled on the wall with dark wood that from age and rubbing resembled oak, and looking more like a rustic hall of entrance than a kitchen, stood the Malay — his turban and loose trousers of dingy white relieved upon the dark panelling: he had placed himself nearer to the girl than she seemed to relish; though her native spirit of mountain intrepidity contended with the feeling of simple awe which her countenance expressed as she gazed upon the tiger-cat before her. And a more striking picture there could not be imagined, than the beautiful English face of the girl, and its exquisite fairness, together with her erect and independent attitude, contrasted with the sallow and bilious skin of the Malay, enamelled or veneered with mahogany, by marine air, his small, fierce, restless eyes, thin lips, slavish gestures and adorations. Half-hidden by the ferocious looking Malay, was a little child from a neighbouring cottage who had crept in after him, and was now in the act of reverting its head, and gazing upwards at the turban and the fiery eyes beneath it, whilst with one hand he caught at the dress of the young woman for protection. My knowledge of the Oriental tongues is not remarkably extensive, being indeed confined to two words — the Arabic word for barley, and the Turkish for opium (madjoon), which I have learned from Anastasius. And, as I had neither a Malay dictionary, nor even °Adelung's Mithridates, which might have helped me to a few words, I addressed him in some lines from the Iliad; considering that, of such languages as I possessed, Greek, in point of longitude, came geographically nearest to an Oriental one. He worshipped me in a most devout manner, and replied in what I suppose was Malay. In this way I saved my reputation with my neighbours; for the Malay had no means of betraying the secret. He lay down upon the floor for about an hour, and then pursued his journey. On his departure, I presented him with a piece of opium. To him, as an Orientalist, I concluded that opium must be familiar; and the expression of his face convinced me that it was. Nevertheless, I was struck with some little consternation when I saw him suddenly raise his hand to his mouth, and (in the school-boy phrase) bolt the whole, divided into three pieces, at one mouthful. The quantity was enough to kill three 5 dragoons and their horses: and I felt some alarm for the poor creature: but what could be done? I had given him the opium in compassion for his solitary life, on recollecting that if he had travelled on foot from London, it must be nearly three weeks since he 10 could have exchanged a thought with any human being. I could not think of violating the laws of hospitality by having him seized and drenched with an emetic, and thus frightening him into a notion that we were going to sacrifice him to some English idol.

15 No: there was clearly no help for it:— he took his leave: and for some days I felt anxious: but as I never heard of any Malay being found dead, I became convinced that he was used to opium: and that I must have done him the service I designed, by giving him 20 one night of respite from the pains of wandering.

This incident I have digressed to mention, because this Malay (partly from the picturesque exhibition he assisted to frame, partly from the anxiety I connected with his image for some days) fastened afterwards 25 upon my dreams, and brought other Malays with him, worse than himself, that ran °“a-muck” at me, and led me into a world of troubles. — But to quit this episode, and to return to my intercalary year of happiness. I have said already, that on a subject so important to us all as happiness, we should listen with pleasure to any man’s experience or experiments, even though he were but a plough-boy, who cannot be supposed to have ploughed very deep into such an intractable soil as that of human pains and pleasures, or to have conducted his researches upon any very enlightened principles. But I, who have taken happiness, both in a solid and a liquid shape, both boiled and unboiled, both East India and Turkey — who have conducted my experiments upon this interesting subject with a sort of galvanic battery — and have, for the general benefit of the world, inoculated myself, as it were, with the poison of 8000 drops of laudanum per day (just, for the same reason, as a French surgeon inoculated himself lately with cancer — an English one, twenty years ago, with plague — and a third, I know not of what nation, with hydrophobia), — I (it will be admitted) must surely know what happiness is, if anybody does. And, therefore, I will here lay down an analysis of happiness; and as the most interesting mode of communicating it, I will give it, not didacti-cally; but wrapped up and involved in a picture of one evening, as I spent every evening during the intercalary year when laudanum, though taken daily, was to me no more than the elixir of pleasure. This done, I shall quit the subject of happiness altogether, and pass to a very different one — the pains of opium.

Let there be a cottage, standing in a valley, 18 miles from any town — no spacious valley, but about two miles long by three quarters of a mile in average width; the benefit of which provision is, that all the family resident within its circuit will compose, as it were, one larger household personally familiar to your eye, and more or less interesting to your affections. Let the mountains be real mountains, between 3 and 4000 feet high; and the cottage, a real cottage; not (as a witty author has it) °“a cottage with a double coach-house:” let it be, in fact (for I must abide by the actual scene), a white cottage, embowered with flowering shrubs, so chosen as to unfold a succession of flowers upon the walls, and clustering round the windows through all the months of spring, summer, and autumn — beginning, in fact, with May roses, and ending with jasmine. Let it, however, not be spring, nor summer, nor autumn — but winter, in his sternest shape. This is a most important point in the science of happiness. And I am surprised to see people overlook it, and think it matter of congratulation that winter is going; or, if coming, is not likely to be a severe one. On the contrary, I put up a petition annually, for as much snow, hail, frost, or storm, of one kind 5 or other, as the skies can possibly afford us. Surely everybody is aware of the divine pleasures which attend a winter fire-side: candles at four o'clock, warm hearth-rugs, tea, a fair tea-maker, shutters closed, curtains flowing in ample draperies on the floor, whilst 10 the wind and rain are raging audibly without,

°And at the doors and windows seem to call,
As heav'n and earth they would together mell;
Yet the least entrance find they none at all;
Whence sweeter grows our rest secure in massy hall. 15

— Castle of Indolence.

All these are items in the description of a winter evening, which must surely be familiar to every body born in a high latitude. And it is evident, that most of these delicacies, like ice-cream, require a very low 20 temperature of the atmosphere to produce them: they are fruits which cannot be ripened without weather stormy or inclement, in some way or other. I am not “particular,” as people say, whether it be snow, or black frost, or wind so strong, that (as °Mr. [Clarkson] says) "you may lean your back against it like a post." I can put up even with rain, provided it rains cats and dogs: but something of the sort I must have: and, if I have it not, I think myself in a manner ill-used: for why am I called on to pay so heavily for winter, in coals, and candles, and various privations that will occur even to gentlemen, if I am not to have the article good of its kind? No: a Canadian winter for my money: or a Russian one, where every man is but a co-proprietor with the north wind in the fee-simple of his own ears. Indeed, so great an epicure am I in this matter, that I cannot relish a winter night fully if it be much past °St. Thomas's day, and have degenerated into disgusting tendencies to vernal appearances: no: it must be divided by a thick wall of dark nights from all return of light and sunshine. — From the latter weeks of October to Christmas Eve, therefore, is the period during which happiness is in season, which, in my judgment, enters the room with the tea-tray: for tea, though ridiculed by those who are naturally of coarse nerves, or are become so from wine-drinking, and are not susceptible of influence from so refined a stimulant, will always be the favourite beverage of the intellectual: and, for my part, I would have joined Dr. Johnson in a °bellum internecinum against °Jonas Hanway, or any other impious person, who should presume to disparage it. — But here, to save myself the trouble of too much verbal description, I will introduce a painter; and give him directions for the rest of the picture. Painters 5 do not like white cottages, unless a good deal weather-stained: but as the reader now understands that it is a winter night, his services will not be required, except for the inside of the house.

Paint me, then, a room seventeen feet by twelve, 10 and not more than seven and a half feet high. This, reader, is somewhat ambitiously styled, in my family, the drawing-room: but, being contrived °“a double debt to pay,” it is also, and more justly, termed the library; for it happens that books are the only article 15 of property in which I am richer than my neighbours. Of these, I have about five thousand, collected gradually since my eighteenth year. Therefore, painter, put as many as you can into this room. Make it populous with books: and, furthermore, paint me a 20 good fire; and furniture plain and modest, befitting the unpretending cottage of a scholar. And, near the fire, paint me a tea-table; and (as it is clear that no creature can come to see one such a stormy night,) place only two cups and saucers on the tea-tray: and, 25

if you know how to paint such a thing symbolically, or otherwise, paint me an eternal tea-pot—eternal °à parte ante, and °à parte post ; for I usually drink tea from eight o'clock at night to four o'clock
5 in the morning. And, as it is very unpleasant to make tea, or to pour it out for oneself, paint me a lovely young woman, sitting at the table. Paint her arms like °Aurora's and her smiles like °Hebe's:— But no, dear M [argaret], not even in jest let me insinuate that 10 thy power to illuminate my cottage rests upon a tenure so perishable as mere personal beauty; or that the witchcraft of angelic smiles lies within the empire of any earthly pencil. Pass, then, my good painter, to something more within its power: and the next article 15 brought forward should naturally be myself—a picture of the Opium-eater, with his “little golden receptacle of the pernicious drug,” lying beside him on the table. As to the opium, I have no objection to see a picture of that, though I would rather see the 20 original: you may paint it, if you choose; but I apprise you, that no “little” receptacle would, even in 1816, answer my purpose, who was at a distance from the “stately Pantheon,” and all druggists (mortal or otherwise). No: you may as well paint the real 25 receptacle, which was not of gold, but of glass, and as much like a wine-decanter as possible. Into this you may put a quart of ruby-coloured laudanum: that, and a book of German metaphysics placed by its side, will sufficiently attest my being in the neighbourhood; but, as to myself,—there I demur. I admit 5 that, naturally, I ought to occupy the foreground of the picture; that being the hero of the piece, or (if you choose) the criminal at the bar, my body should be had into court. This seems reasonable: but why should I confess, on this point, to a painter? or why 10 confess at all? If the public (into whose private ear I am confidentially whispering my confessions, and not into any painter's) should chance to have framed some agreeable picture for itself, of the Opium-eater's exterior,—should have ascribed to him, romantically, 15 an elegant person, or a handsome face, why should I barbarously tear from it so pleasing a delusion—pleasing both to the public and to me? No: paint me, if at all, according to your own fancy: and, as a painter's fancy should teem with beautiful creations, 20 I cannot fail, in that way, to be a gainer. And now, reader, we have run through all the °ten categories of my condition, as it stood about 1816–17: up to the middle of which latter year I judge myself to have been a happy man: and the elements of that happi- 25 ness I have endeavoured to place before you, in the above sketch of the interior of a scholar's library, in a cottage among the mountains, on a stormy winter evening.

5 °But now farewell — a long farewell to happiness — winter or summer! °Farewell to smiles and laughter! Farewell to peace of mind! Farewell to hope and to tranquil dreams, and to the blessed consolations of sleep! For more than three years and a half I am 10 summoned away from these: I am now arrived at an °Iliad of woes: for I have now to record

THE PAINS OF OPIUM.

°— As when some great painter dips
His pencil in the gloom of earthquake and eclipse.

SHELLEY'S Revolt of Islam.

Reader, who have thus far accompanied me, I must 15 request your attention to a brief explanatory note on three points:

1. For several reasons, I have not been able to compose the notes for this part of my narrative into any regular and connected shape. I give the notes
20 disjointed as I find them, or have now drawn them up from memory. Some of them point to their own date; some I have dated; and some are undated. Whenever it could answer my purpose to transplant them from the natural or chronological order, I have not scrupled to do so. Sometimes I speak in the present, sometimes in the past tense. Few of the notes, perhaps, were written exactly at the period of time to which they relate; but this can little affect their accuracy; as the impressions were such that they can never fade from my mind. Much has been omitted. I could not, without effort, constrain myself to the task of either recalling, or constructing into a regular narrative, the whole burthen of horrors which lies upon my brain. This feeling partly I plead in excuse, and partly that I am now in London, and am a helpless sort of person, who cannot even arrange his own papers without assistance; and I am separated from the hands which are wont to perform for me the offices of an amanuensis.

2. You will think, perhaps, that I am too confidential and communicative of my own private history. It may be so. But my way of writing is rather to think aloud, and follow my own humours, than much to consider who is listening to me; and if I stop to consider what is proper to be said to this or that person, I shall soon come to doubt whether any part at all is proper. The fact is, I place myself at a distance of fifteen or twenty years ahead of this time, and suppose myself writing to those who will be interested about me hereafter; and wishing to have some record

5 of time, the entire history of which no one can know but myself, I do it as fully as I am able with the efforts I am now capable of making, because I know not whether I can ever find time to do it again.

3. It will occur to you often to ask, why did I not 10 release myself from the horrors of opium, by leaving it off, or diminishing it? To this I must answer briefly: it might be supposed that I yielded to the fascinations of opium too easily; it cannot be supposed that any man can be charmed by its terrors.
15 The reader may be sure, therefore, that I made attempts innumerable to reduce the quantity. I add, that those who witnessed the agonies of those attempts, and not myself, were the first to beg me to desist. But could not have I reduced it a drop 20 day, or by adding water, have bisected or trisected a drop? A thousand drops bisected would thus have taken nearly six years to reduce; and that way would certainly not have answered. But this is a common 25 mistake of those who know nothing of opium experimentally; I appeal to those who do, whether it is not always found that down to a certain point it can be reduced with ease and even pleasure, but that, after that point, further reduction causes intense suffering. Yes, say many thoughtless persons, who know not what they are talking of, you will suffer a little 5 low spirits and dejection for a few days. I answer, no; there is nothing like low spirits; on the contrary, the mere animal spirits are uncommonly raised: the pulse is improved: the health is better. It is not there that the suffering lies. It has no resemblance 10 to the sufferings caused by renouncing wine. It is a state of unutterable irritation of stomach (which surely is not much like dejection), accompanied by intense perspirations, and feelings such as I shall not attempt to describe without more space at my command. 15

I shall now enter °“in medias res,” and shall anticipate, from a time when my opium pains might be said to be at their acmé, an account of their palsyng effects on the intellectual faculties.

My studies have now been long interrupted. I can- 20 not read to myself with any pleasure, hardly with a moment's endurance. Yet I read aloud sometimes for the pleasure of others; because, reading is an accomplishment of mine; and, in the slang use of the word accomplishment as a superficial and ornamental attainment, almost the only one I possess: and formerly, if I had any vanity at all connected with any endowment or attainment of mine, it was with this; for I 5 had observed that no accomplishment was so rare. Players are the worst readers of all: °[John Kemble] reads vilely: and °Mrs. [Siddons], who is so celebrated, can read nothing well but dramatic compositions: Milton she cannot read sufferably. People in 10 general either read poetry without any passion at all, or else °overstep the modesty of nature, and read not like scholars. Of late, if I have felt moved by anything in books, it has been by the °grand lamentations of Samson Agonistes, or the °great harmonies of the 15 Satanic speeches in Paradise Regained, when read aloud by myself. A °young lady sometimes comes and drinks tea with us: at her request and M[argaret]'s, I now and then read W[ordsworth]'s poems to them. (W[ordsworth], by the bye, is the only poet 20 I ever met who could read his own verses: often indeed he reads admirably.)

For nearly two years I believe that I read no book but one: and I owe it to the author, in discharge of a great debt of gratitude, to mention what that was.
25 The sublimer and more passionate poets I still read, as I have said, by snatches, and occasionally. But my proper vocation, as I well knew, was the exercise of the analytic understanding. Now, for the most part, analytic studies are continuous, and not to be pursued by fits and starts, or fragmentary efforts. 5 Mathematics, for instance, intellectual philosophy, &c. were all become insupportable to me; I shrunk from them with a sense of powerless and infantine feebleness that gave me an anguish the greater from remembering the time when I grappled with them to 10 my own hourly delight; and for this further reason, because I had devoted the labour of my whole life, and had dedicated my intellect, blossoms and fruits, to the slow and elaborate toil of constructing one single work, to which I had presumed to give the 15 title of an unfinished work of °Spinoza's; viz. De emendatione humani intellectûs. This was now lying locked up, as by frost, like any °Spanish bridge or aqueduct, begun upon too great a scale for the resources of the architect; and, instead of surviving 20 me as a monument of wishes at least, and aspirations, and a life of labour dedicated to the exaltation of human nature in that way in which God had best fitted me to promote so great an object, it was likely to stand a memorial to my children of hopes defeated, 25 of baffled efforts, of materials uselessly accumulated, of foundations laid that were never to support a superstructure,—of the grief and the ruin of the architect. In this state of imbecility, I had, for amusement, 5 turned my attention to political economy; my understanding, which formerly had been as active and restless as a hyæna, could not, I suppose (so long as I lived at all) sink into utter lethargy; and political economy offers this advantage to a person in my state, 10 that though it is eminently an organic science (no part, that is to say, but what acts on the whole, as the whole again re-acts on each part), yet the several parts may be detached and contemplated singly. Great as was the prostration of my powers at this 15 time, yet I could not forget my knowledge; and my understanding had been for too many years intimate with severe thinkers, with logic, and the great masters of knowledge, not to be aware of the utter feebleness of the main herd of modern economists. I had been 20 led in 1811 to look into loads of books and pamphlets on many branches of economy; and, at my desire, M[argaret] sometimes read to me chapters from more recent works, or parts of parliamentary debates. I saw that these were generally the very dregs and 25 rinsings of the human intellect; and that any man of sound head, and practised in wielding logic with a scholastic adroitness, might take up the whole academy of modern economists, and throttle them between heaven and earth with his finger and thumb, or bray their fungus heads to powder with a lady's fan. At length, in 1819, a friend in Edinburgh sent me down °Mr. Ricardo's book: and recurring to my own prophetic anticipation of the advent of some legislator for this science, I said, before I had finished the first chapter, °“Thou art the man!” Wonder and curiosity were emotions that had long been dead in me. Yet I wondered once more: I wondered at myself that I could once again be stimulated to the effort of reading: and much more I wondered at the book. Had this profound work been really written in England during the nineteenth century? Was it possible? I supposed °thinking had been extinct in England. Could it be that an Englishman, and he not in academic bowers, but oppressed by °mercantile and senatorial cares, had accomplished what all the universities of Europe, and a century of thought, had failed even to advance by one hair's breadth? All other writers had been crushed and overlaid by the enormous weight of facts and documents; Mr. Ricardo had deduced, °a priori, from the understanding itself, laws which first gave a ray of light into the unwieldy chaos of materials, and had constructed what had been but a collection of tentative discussions into a science of regular proportions, now first standing on an eternal 5 basis.

Thus did one single work of a profound understanding avail to give me a pleasure and an activity which I had not known for years:—it roused me even to write, or at least to dictate, what M[argaret]
10 wrote for me. It seemed to me, that some important truths had escaped even “the inevitable eye” of Mr. Ricardo: and as these were, for the most part, of such a nature that I could express or illustrate them more
15 briefly and elegantly by algebraic symbols than in the usual clumsy and loitering diction of economists, the whole would not have filled a pocket-book; and being so brief, with M[argaret] for my amanuensis, even at this time, incapable as I was of all general
20 exertion, I drew up my Prolegomena to all future Systems of Political Economy. I hope it will not be found redolent of opium; though, indeed, to most people, the subject is a sufficient opiate.

This exertion, however, was but a temporary flash; as the sequel showed — for I designed to publish my 25 work: arrangements were made at a provincial press, about eighteen miles distant, for printing it. An additional compositor was retained, for some days, on this account. The work was even twice advertised: and I was, in a manner, pledged to the fulfilment of my intention. But I had a preface to write; 5 and a dedication, which I wished to make a splendid one, to Mr. Ricardo. I found myself quite unable to accomplish all this. The arrangements were countermanded: the compositor dismissed: and my "Prolegomena" rested peacefully by the side of its elder and 10 more dignified brother.

I have thus described and illustrated my intellectual torpor, in terms that apply more or less to every part of the four years during which I was under the °Circean spells of opium. But for misery and 15 suffering, I might, indeed, be said to have existed in a dormant state. I seldom could prevail on myself to write a letter; an answer of a few words, to any that I received, was the utmost that I could accomplish; and often that not until the letter had lain 20 weeks, or even months, on my writing table. Without the aid of M[argaret] all records of bills paid or to be paid must have perished: and my whole domestic economy, whatever became of Political Economy, must have gone into irretrievable confusion. — I shall 25 not afterwards allude to this part of the case: it is one, however, which the opium-eater will find, in the end, as oppressive and tormenting as any other, from the sense of incapacity and feebleness, from the direct 5 embarrassments incident to the neglect or procrastination of each day's appropriate duties, and from the remorse which must often exasperate the stings of these evils to a reflective and conscientious mind. The opium-eater loses none of his moral sensibilities,

10 or aspirations: he wishes and longs, as earnestly as ever, to realize what he believes possible, and feels to be exacted by duty; but his intellectual apprehension of what is possible infinitely outruns his power, not of execution only, but even of power to attempt.
15 He lies under the weight of incubus and night-mare: he lies in sight of all that he would fain perform, just as a man forcibly confined to his bed by the mortal languor of a relaxing disease, who is compelled to witness injury or outrage offered to some object of his 20 tenderest love:—he curses the spells which chain him down from motion:—he would lay down his life if he might but get up and walk; but he is powerless as an infant, and cannot even attempt to rise.

25 I now pass to what is the main subject of these latter confessions, to the history and journal of what took place in my dreams ; for these were the immediate and proximate cause of my acutest suffering.

The first notice I had of any important change going on in this part of my physical economy, was 5 from the re-awakening of a state of eye generally incident to childhood, or exalted states of irritability. I know not whether my reader is aware that many children, perhaps most, have a power of painting, as it were, upon the darkness, all sorts of phantoms ; in 10 some, that power is simply a mechanic affection of the eye ; others have a voluntary, or a semi-voluntary power to dismiss or to summon them ; or, as a child once said to me when I questioned him on this matter, "I can tell them to go, and they go ; but some- 15 times they come, when I don't tell them to come." Whereupon I told him that he had almost as unlimited a command over apparitions, as a Roman centurion over his soldiers. — In the middle of 1817, I think it was, that this faculty became positively 20 distressing to me : at night, when I lay awake in bed, vast processions passed along in mournful pomp ; °friezes of never-ending stories, that to my feelings were as sad and solemn as if they were stories drawn from times before °Edipus or °Priam — before °Tyre — 25 before °Memphis. And, at the same time a corresponding change took place in my dreams; a theatre seemed suddenly opened and lighted up within my brain, which presented nightly spectacles of more 5 than earthly splendour. And the four following facts may be mentioned, as noticeable at this time :

1. That, as the creative state of the eye increased, a sympathy seemed to arise between the waking and the dreaming states of the brain in one point—that 10 whatsoever I happened to call up and to trace by a voluntary act upon the darkness was very apt to transfer itself to my dreams; so that I feared to exercise this faculty; for, as Midas turned all things to gold, that yet baffled his hopes and defrauded his 15 human desires, so whatsoever things capable of being visually represented I did but think of in the darkness, immediately shaped themselves into phantoms of the eye; and, by a process apparently no less inevitable, when thus once traced in faint and visionary 20 colours, like writings in sympathetic ink, they were drawn out by the fierce chemistry of my dreams, into insufferable splendour that fretted my heart.

2. For this, and all other changes in my dreams, were accompanied by deep-seated anxiety and gloomy 25 melancholy, such as are wholly incommunicable by words. I seemed every night to descend, not metaphorically, but literally to descend, into chasms and sunless abysses, depths below depths, from which it seemed hopeless that I could ever re-ascend. Nor did I, by waking, feel that I had re-ascended. This I do not dwell upon; because the state of gloom which attended these gorgeous spectacles, amounting at last to utter darkness, as of some suicidal despondency, cannot be approached by words.

3. The sense of space, and in the end, the sense of time, were both powerfully affected. Buildings, landscapes, &c. were exhibited in proportions so vast as the bodily eye is not fitted to receive. Space swelled, and was amplified to an extent of unutterable infinity. This, however, did not disturb me so much as the vast expansion of time; I sometimes seemed to have lived for 70 or 100 years in one night; nay, sometimes had feelings representative of a millennium passed in that time, or, however, of a duration far beyond the limits of any human experience.

4. The minutest incidents of childhood, or forgotten scenes of later years, were often revived: I could not be said to recollect them; for if I had been told of them when waking, I should not have been able to acknowledge them as parts of my past experience. But placed as they were before me, in dreams like intuitions, and clothed in all their evanescent circumstances and accompanying feelings, I recognised them 5 instantaneously. I was once told by a °near relative of mine, that having in her childhood fallen into a river, and being on the very verge of death but for the critical assistance which reached her, she saw in a moment her whole life, in its minutest incidents,

10 arrayed before her simultaneously as in a mirror; and she had a faculty developed as suddenly for comprehending the whole and every part. This, from some opium experiences of mine, I can believe; I have, indeed, seen the same thing asserted twice in 15 modern books, and accompanied by a remark which I am convinced is true; viz. that the °dread book of account, which the Scriptures speak of is, in fact, the mind itself of each individual. Of this at least, I feel assured, that there is no such thing as forgetting
20 possible to the mind; a thousand accidents may, and will interpose a veil between our present consciousness and the secret inscriptions on the mind; accidents of the same sort will also rend away this veil; but alike, whether veiled or unveiled, the inscription 25 remains for ever; just as the stars seem to withdraw before the °common light of day, whereas, in fact, we all know that it is the light which is drawn over them as a veil — and that they are waiting to be revealed when the obscuring daylight shall have withdrawn.

5

Having noticed these four facts as memorably distinguishing my dreams from those of health, I shall now cite a case illustrative of the first fact; and shall then cite any others that I remember, either in their chronological order, or any other that may give them 10 more effect as pictures to the reader.

I had been in youth, and even since, for occasional amusement, a great reader of °Livy, whom, I confess, that I prefer, both for style and matter, to any other of the Roman historians: and I had often felt as 15 most solemn and appalling sounds, and most emphatically representative of the majesty of the Roman people, the two words so often occurring in Livy — Consul Romanus ; especially when the consul is introduced in his military character. I mean to say 20 that the words king — sultan — regent, &c. or any other titles of those who embody in their own persons the collective majesty of a great people, had less power over my reverential feelings. I had also, though no great reader of history, made myself min- 25

utely and critically familiar with one period of English history, viz. the period of the Parliamentary War, having been attracted by the moral grandeur of some who figured in that day, and by the many interesting 5 memoirs which survive those unquiet times. Both these parts of my lighter reading, having furnished me often with matter of reflection, now furnished me with matter for my dreams. Often I used to see, after painting upon the blank darkness a sort of re-
10 hearsal whilst waking, a crowd of ladies, and perhaps a festival, and dances. And I heard it said, or I said to myself, "These are English ladies from the unhappy times of Charles I. These are the wives and the 15 daughters of those who met in peace, and sate at the same table, and were allied by marriage or by blood; and yet, after a °certain day in August, 1642, never smiled upon each other again, nor met but in the field of battle; and at °Marston Moor, at Newbury, or at 20 Naseby cut asunder all ties of love by the cruel sabre, and washed away in blood the memory of ancient friendship." — The ladies danced, and looked as lovely as the court of George IV. Yet I knew, even in my dream, that they had been in the grave for nearly two centuries. — This pageant would suddenly dissolve:
25 and, at a clapping of hands would be heard the heartquaking sound of Consul Romanus : and immediately came °“sweeping by,” in gorgeous paludaments, °Paulus or Marius, girt round by a company of centurions, with the crimson tunic hoisted on a spear, and followed by the °alalagmos of the Roman legions. 5

Many years ago, when I was looking over °Piranesi's Antiquities of Rome, Mr. Coleridge, who was standing by, described to me a set of plates by that artist, called his Dreams, and which record the scenery of his own visions during the delirium of a fever: Some of them 10 (I describe only from memory of Mr. Coleridge's account) represented vast Gothic halls: on the floor of which stood all sorts of engines and machinery, wheels, cables, pulleys, levers, catapults, &c. &c. expressive of enormous power put forth, and resistance overcome. 15 Creeping along the sides of the walls, you perceive a staircase; and upon it, groping his way upwards, was Piranesi himself: follow the stairs a little further, and you perceive it come to a sudden and abrupt termination, without any balustrade, and allowing no step 20 onwards to him who had reached the extremity, except into the depths below. Whatever is to become of poor Piranesi, you suppose, at least, that his labours must in some way terminate here. But raise your eyes, and behold a second flight of stairs still higher: on 25 which again Piranesi is perceived, but this time standing on the very brink of the abyss. Again elevate your eye, and a still more aërial flight of stairs is beheld: and again is poor Piranesi busy on his aspiring labours: and so on, until the unfinished stairs and Piranesi both are lost in the upper gloom of the hall. — With the same power of endless growth and self-reproduction did my architecture proceed in dreams. In the early stage of my malady, the splendours of my dreams were indeed chiefly architectural: and I beheld such pomp of cities and palaces as was never yet beheld by the waking eye, unless in the clouds. From °a great modern poet I cite part of a passage which describes, as an appearance actually beheld in the clouds, what in many of its circumstances I saw frequently in sleep:

The appearance, instantaneously disclosed,
 Was of a mighty city — boldly say
 A wilderness of building, sinking far
 And self-withdrawn into a wondrous depth, Far sinking into splendor — without end !
 Fabric it seem'd of diamond, and of gold,
 With alabaster domes, and silver spires,
 And blazing terrace upon terrace, high Uplifted ; here, serene pavilions bright
 In avenues disposed ; there towers begirt

With battlements that on their restless fronts
 Bore stars — illumination of all gems !
 By earthly nature had the effect been wrought
 Upon the dark materials of the storm
 Now pacified ; on them, and on the coves, 5
 And mountain-steeps and summits, whereunto
 The vapours had receded, — taking there
 Their station under a cerulean sky. &c. &c.

The sublime circumstance — “battlements that on their restless fronts bore stars,” — might have been 10 copied from my architectural dreams, for it often occurred.— We hear it reported of °Dryden and of °Fuseli, in modern times, that they thought proper to eat raw meat for the sake of obtaining splendid dreams: how much better for such a purpose to have 15 eaten opium, which yet I do not remember that any poet is recorded to have done, except the dramatist °Shadwell: and in ancient days, °Homer is, I think, rightly reputed to have known the virtues of opium.

To my architecture succeeded dreams of lakes — 20 and silvery expanses of water:— these haunted me so much that I feared (though possibly it will appear ludicrous to a medical man) that some dropsical state or tendency of the brain might thus be making itself (to use a metaphysical word) objective ; and the sentient 25 organ project itself as its own object.— For two months

I have suffered greatly in my head,— a part of my bodily structure which had hitherto been so clear from all touch or taint of weakness (physically, I mean), that I used to say of it, as °the last Lord Orford said of his stomach, that it seemed likely to survive the rest of 5 my person.— Till now I had never felt a head-ach even, or any the slightest pain, except rheumatic pains caused by my own folly. However, I got over this attack, °though it must have been verging on something very 10 dangerous.

The waters now changed their character,— from translucent lakes, shining like mirrors, they now became seas and oceans. And now came a tremendous change, which, unfolding itself slowly like a scroll, 15 through many months, promised an abiding torment ; and, in fact, it never left me until the winding up of my case. Hitherto the human face had mixed often in my dreams, but not despotically nor with any special power of tormenting. But now that which I have called 20 the tyranny of the human face began to unfold itself. Perhaps some part of my London life might be answerable for this. Be that as it may, now it was that upon the rocking waters of the ocean the human face began to appear : the sea appeared paved with innumerable 25 faces, upturned to the heavens : faces, imploring, wrathful, despairing, surged upward by thousands, by myriads, by generations, by centuries:—my agitation was infinite,—my mind tossed—and surged with the ocean.

May, 1818.

The Malay has been a fearful enemy for months. I have been every night, through his means, transported into Asiatic scenes. I know not whether others share in my feelings on this point; but I have often thought that if I were compelled to forego England, and to live in China, and among Chinese manners and modes of life and scenery, I should go mad. °The causes of my horror lie deep; and some of them must be common to others. Southern Asia, in general, is the seat of awful images and associations. As the cradle of the human race, it would alone have a dim and reverential feeling connected with it. But there are other reasons. No man can pretend that the wild, barbarous, and capricious superstitions of Africa, or of savage tribes elsewhere, affect him in the way that he is affected by the ancient, monumental, cruel, and elaborate religions of Indostan, &c. The mere antiquity of Asiatic things, of their institutions, histories, modes of faith, &c. is so impressive, that to me the vast age of the race and name overpowers the sense of youth in the individual. A young Chinese seems to me an antediluvian man renewed. Even Englishmen, though not bred in any knowledge of such institutions, cannot but shudder at the mystic sublimity of castes that have flowed apart, and refused to mix, through such immemorial tracts of time; nor can any man fail to be awed by the names of the Ganges, or the Euphrates. It contributes much to these feelings, that southern Asia is, and has been for thousands of years, the part of the earth most swarming with human life; the great officina gentium. Man is a weed in those regions. The vast empires also, in which the enormous population of Asia has always been cast, give a further sublimity to the feelings associated with all Oriental names or images. In China, over and above what it has in common with the rest of southern Asia, I am terrified by the modes of life, by the manners, and the barrier of utter abhorrence, and want of sympathy, placed between us by feelings deeper than I can analyse. I could sooner live with lunatics, or brute animals. All this, and much more than I can say, or have time to say, the reader must enter into before he can comprehend the unimaginable horror which these dreams of Oriental imagery, and mythological tortures, impressed upon me. Under the connecting feeling of tropical heat and vertical sun-lights, I brought together all creatures, birds, beasts, reptiles, all trees and plants, usages and appearances, that are found in all tropical regions, and assembled them together in China or Indostan. From kindred 5 feelings, I soon brought Egypt and all her gods under the same law. I was stared at, hooted at, grinned at, chattered at, by monkeys, by paroquets, by cockatoos.

I ran into pagodas: and was fixed, for centuries, at the summit or in secret rooms; I was the idol; I was the 10 priest; I was worshipped; I was sacrificed. I fled from the wrath of °Brama through all the forests of Asia: °Vishnu hated me: °Seeva laid wait for me. I came suddenly upon °Isis and °Osiris: I had done a deed, they said, which the ibis and the crocodile trem- 15 bled at. I was buried, for a thousand years, in stone coffins, with mummies and sphynxes, in narrow chambers at the heart of eternal pyramids. I was kissed, with cancerous kisses, by crocodiles; and laid, confounded with all unutterable slimy things, amongst 20 reeds and Nilotic mud.

I thus give the reader some slight abstraction of my Oriental dreams, which always filled me with such amazement at the monstrous scenery, that horror seemed absorbed, for a while, in sheer astonishment. 25

Sooner or later, came a reflux of feeling that swallowed up the astonishment, and left me, not so much in terror, as in hatred and abomination of what I saw. Over every form, and threat, and punishment, and dim sightless incarceration, brooded a sense of eternity and infinity that drove me into an oppression as of madness. Into these dreams only, it was, with one or two slight exceptions, that any circumstances of physical horror entered. All before had been moral and spiritual terrors. But here the main agents were ugly birds, or snakes, or crocodiles; especially the last. The cursed crocodile became to me the object of more horror than almost all the rest. I was compelled to live with him; and (as was always the case almost in my dreams) for centuries. I escaped sometimes, and found myself in Chinese houses, with cane tables, &c. All the feet of the tables, sophas, &c. soon became instinct with life: the abominable head of the crocodile, and his leering eyes, looked out at me, multiplied into a thousand repetitions: and I stood loathing and fascinated. And so often did this hideous reptile haunt my dreams, that many times the very same dream was broken up in the very same way: I heard gentle voices speaking to me (I hear every thing when I am sleeping); and instantly I awoke:

it was broad noon; and my children were standing, hand in hand, at my bed-side; come to show me their coloured shoes, or new frocks, or to let me see them dressed for going out. I protest that so awful was the transition from the damned crocodile, and the other unutterable monsters and abortions of my dreams, to the sight of innocent human natures and of infancy, that, in the mighty and sudden revulsion of mind, I wept, and could not forbear it, as I kissed their faces.

June, 1819.

I have had occasion to remark, at various periods of my life, that the deaths of those whom we love, and indeed the contemplation of death generally, is °(cæteris paribus) more affecting in summer than in any other season of the year. And the reasons are these three, I think: first, that the visible heavens in summer appear far higher, more distant, and (if such a solecism may be excused) more infinite; the clouds, by which chiefly the eye expounds the distance of the blue pavilion stretched over our heads, are in summer more voluminous, massed, and accumulated in far grander and more towering piles: secondly, the light and the appearances of the declining and the setting sun are much more fitted to be types and characters of the Infinite: and, thirdly, (which is the main reason) the exuberant and riotous prodigality of life naturally forces the mind more powerfully upon the antagonist thought of death, and the wintry 5 sterility of the grave. For it may be observed, generally, that wherever two thoughts stand related to each other by a law of antagonism, and exist, as it were, by mutual repulsion, they are apt to suggest each other. On these accounts it is that I find it

10 impossible to banish the thought of death when I am walking alone in the endless days of summer; and any particular death, if not more affecting, at least haunts my mind more obstinately and besiegingly in that season. Perhaps this cause, and a slight 15 incident which I omit, might have been the immediate occasions of the following dream; to which, however, a predisposition must always have existed in my mind; but having been once roused it never left me, and split into a thousand fantastic varieties, 20 which often suddenly re-united, and composed again the original dream.

I thought that it was a Sunday morning in May, that it was Easter Sunday, and as yet very early in the morning. I was standing, as it seemed to me, at 25 the door of my own cottage. Right before me lay the very scene which could really be commanded from that situation, but exalted, as was usual, and solemnized by the power of dreams. There were the same mountains, and the same lovely valley at their feet; but the mountains were raised to more than Alpine height, and there was interspace far larger between them of meadows and forest lawns; the hedges were rich with white roses; and no living creature was to be seen, excepting that in the green church-yard there were cattle tranquilly reposing upon the verdant graves, and particularly round about the grave of a °child whom I had tenderly loved, just as I had really beheld them, a little before sun-rise in the same summer, when that child died. I gazed upon the well-known scene, and I said aloud (as I thought) to myself, “It yet wants much of sun-rise; and it is Easter Sunday; and that is the day on which they celebrate the °first fruits of resurrection. °I will walk abroad; old griefs shall be forgotten to-day; for the air is cool and still, and the hill are high, and stretch away to Heaven; and the forest-glades are as quiet as the church-yard; and with the dew I can wash the fever from my forehead, and then I shall be unhappy no longer.” And I turned, as if to open my garden gate; and immediately I saw upon the left a scene far different; but which yet the power of dreams had reconciled into harmony with the other. The scene was an Oriental one; and there also it was Easter Sunday, and very early in the morning. And at a vast distance 5 were visible, as a stain upon the horizon, the domes and cupolas of a great city — an image or faint abstraction, caught perhaps in childhood from some picture of Jerusalem. And not a bow-shot from me, upon a stone and °shaded by Judean palms, there sat

10 a woman; and I looked; and it was — Ann! She fixed her eyes upon me earnestly; and I said to her at length: “So then I have found you at last.” I waited: but she answered me not a word. Her face was the same as when I saw it last, and yet again 15 how different! Seventeen years ago, when the lamp-light fell upon her face, as for the last time I kissed her lips (lips, Ann, that to me were not polluted), her eyes were streaming with tears: °the tears were now wiped away; she seemed more beautiful than she 20 was at that time, but° in all other points the same, and not older. Her looks were tranquil, but with unusual solemnity of expression; and I now gazed upon her with some awe; but suddenly her countenance grew dim, and, turning to the mountains, I 25 perceived vapours rolling between us; in a moment, all had vanished; thick darkness came on; and, in the twinkling of an eye, I was far away from mountains, and by lamp-light in Oxford-street, walking again with Ann — just as we walked seventeen years before, when we were both children. 5

As a °final specimen, I cite one of a different character, from 1820.

The dream commenced with a music which now I often heard in dreams — a music of preparation and of awakening suspense; a music like the opening of the °Coronation Anthem, and which, like that, gave the feeling of a vast march — of infinite cavalcades filing off — and the tread of innumerable armies. The morning was come of a mighty day — a day of crisis and of final hope for human nature, then suffering 15 some mysterious eclipse, and labouring in some dread extremity. Somewhere, I knew not where — somehow, I knew not how — by some beings, I knew not whom — a battle, a strife, an agony, was conducting, — was evolving like a great drama, or piece of music; 20 with which my sympathy was the more insupportable from my confusion as to its place, its cause, its nature, and its possible issue. I, as is usual in dreams, (where, of necessity, we make ourselves central to every movement), had the power, and yet had not 25

the power, to decide it. I had the power, if I could raise myself, to will it; and yet again had not the power, for the weight of twenty Atlantics was upon me, or the oppression of inexpressible guilt. °“Deeper 5 than ever plummet sounded,” I lay inactive. Then, like a chorus, the passion deepened. Some greater interest was at stake; some mightier cause than ever yet the sword had pleaded, or trumpet had proclaimed. Then came sudden alarms: hurrying to and fro: trepi-
10 dations of innumerable fugitives, I knew not whether from the good cause or the bad: darkness and lights: tempest and human faces; and at last, with the sense that all was lost, female forms, and the features that were worth all the world to me, and but a moment al-15 lowed, — and clasped hands, and heart-breaking partings, and then — everlasting farewells! °and with a sigh, such as the caves of hell sighed when the incestuous mother uttered the abhorred name of death, the sound was reverberated — everlasting farewells!
20 and again, and yet again reverberated — everlasting farewells!

And I awoke in struggles, and cried aloud — °“I will sleep no more.”

But I am now called upon to wind up a narrative which has already extended to an unreasonable length. Within more spacious limits, the materials which I have used might have been better unfolded; and much which I have not used might have been added with effect. Perhaps, however, enough has been given. It now remains that I should say something of the way in which this conflict of horrors was finally brought to a crisis. The reader is already aware (from a passage near the beginning of the introduction to the first part) that the opium-eater has, in some way or other, “unwound, almost to its final links, the accursed chain which bound him.” By what means? To have narrated this, according to the original intention, would have far exceeded the space which can now be allowed. It is fortunate, as such a cogent reason exists for abridging it, that I should, on a maturer view of the case, have been exceedingly unwilling to injure, by any such unaffecting details, the impression of the history itself, as an appeal to the prudence and the conscience of the yet unconfirmed opium-eater — or even (though a very inferior consideration) to injure its effect as a composition. The interest of the judicious reader will not attach itself chiefly to the subject of the fascinating spells, but to the fascinating power. Not the opium-eater, but the opium, is the true hero of the tale, and the legitimate centre on which the interest revolves. The object was to display the marvellous agency of opium, whether for pleasure or for pain : if that is done, the action of the piece has closed.

5 However, as some people, in spite of all laws to the contrary, will persist in asking what became of the opium-eater, and in what state he now is, I answer for him thus : The reader is aware that opium had long ceased to found its empire on spells of pleasure ; it
10 was solely by the tortures connected with the attempt to abjure it that it kept its hold. Yet, as other tortures, no less it may be thought, attended the non-abjuration of such a tyrant, a choice only of evils was left ; and that might as well have been adopted, which,
15 however terrific in itself, held out a prospect of final restoration to happiness. This appears true ; but good logic gave the author no strength to act upon it. However, a crisis arrived for the author's life, and a crisis for other objects still dearer to him — and which will 20 always be far dearer to him than his life, even now that it is again a happy one. — I saw that I must die if I continued the opium : I determined, therefore, if that should be required, to die in throwing it off. How much I was at that time taking I cannot say ;
25 for the opium which I used had been purchased for me by a friend who afterwards refused to let me pay him ; so that I could not ascertain even what quantity I had used within the year. I apprehend, however, that I took it very irregularly : and that I varied from about fifty or sixty grains to 150 a-day. My first task 5 was to reduce it to forty, to thirty, and, as fast as I could, to twelve grains.

I triumphed : but think not, reader, that therefore my sufferings were ended, nor think of me as of one sitting in a dejected state. Think of me as one, even 10 when four months had passed, still agitated, writhing, throbbing, palpitating, shattered ; and much, perhaps, in the situation of him who has been racked, as I collect the torments of that state from the affecting account of them left by °a most innocent sufferer (of 15 the times of James I.). Meantime, I derived no benefit from any medicine, except one prescribed to me by an Edinburgh surgeon of great eminence, viz. ammoniated tincture of Valerian. Medical account, therefore, of my emancipation I have not much to give : and 20 even that little, as managed by a man so ignorant of medicine as myself, would probably tend only to mislead. At all events, it would be misplaced in this situation. The moral of the narrative is addressed to the opium-eater ; and therefore, of necessity, limited 25 in its application. If he is taught to fear and tremble, enough has been effected. But he may say, that the issue of my case is at least a proof that opium, after a seventeen years' use and an eight years' abuse of 5 its powers, may still be renounced: and that he may chance to bring to the task greater energy than I did, or that with a stronger constitution than mine he may obtain the same results with less. This may be true: I would not presume to measure the efforts of other 10 men by my own: I heartily wish him more energy: I wish him the same success. Nevertheless, I had motives external to myself which he may unfortunately want: and these supplied me with conscientious supports which mere personal interests might fail to sup-15 ply to a mind debilitated by opium.

°Lord Bacon conjectures that it may be as painful to be born as to die: I think it probable: and, during the whole period of diminishing the opium, I had the torments of a man passing out of one mode of 20 existence into another. The issue was not death, but a sort of physical regeneration: and I may add, that ever since, at intervals, I have had a restoration of more than youthful spirits, though under the pressure of difficulties, which, in a less happy state of mind, I 25 should have called misfortunes.

One memorial of my former condition still remains : my dreams are not yet perfectly calm : the dread swell and agitation of the storm have not wholly subsided : the legions that encamped in them are drawing off, but not all departed : my sleep is still tumultuous, 5 and, like the gates of Paradise to our first parents when looking back from afar, it is still (in the tremendous line of Milton) —

°With dreadful faces throng'd and fiery arms.

CONFESSIONS OF AN ENGLISH OPIUM-EATER

APPENDIX

THE interest excited by the two papers bearing this title, in our Numbers for September and October, 1821, will have kept our promise of a THIRD PART fresh in the remembrance of our Readers. That we are still unable to fulfil our engagement in its original meaning, will, we are sure, be matter of regret to them, as to ourselves, especially when they have perused the following affecting narrative. It was composed for the purpose of being appended to an Edition of the CONFESSIONS, in a separate Volume, which is already before the public; and we have reprinted it entire, that our Subscribers may be in possession of the whole of this extraordinary history.

The proprietors of this little work having determined on reprinting it, some explanation seems called for, to account for the non-appearance of a third part promised in the LONDON MAGAZINE of December last; and the more so because the Proprietors, under whose guarantee that promise was issued, might otherwise be implicated in the blame — little or much — attached to its non-fulfilment. This blame, in mere justice, the author takes wholly upon himself. What may be the exact amount of the guilt which he thus appropriates, is a very dark question to his own judgment, and not much illuminated by any of the masters in casuistry whom he has consulted on the occasion. On the one hand, it seems generally agreed that a promise is binding in the inverse ratio of the numbers to whom it is made: for which reason it is that we see many persons break promises without scruple that are made to a whole nation, who keep their faith religiously in all private engagements, — breaches of promise towards the stronger party being committed at a man's own peril: on the other hand, the only parties interested in the promises of an author are his readers; and these it is a point of modesty in any author to believe as few as possible; or perhaps only one, in which case any promise imposes a sanctity of moral obligation which it is shocking to think of. Casuistry dismissed, however, — the author throws himself on the indulgent consideration of all who may conceive themselves aggrieved by his delay — in the following account of his own condition from the end of last year, when the engagement was made, up nearly to the present time. For any purpose of self-excuse, it might be sufficient to say that intolerable bodily 5 suffering had totally disabled him for almost any exertion of mind, more especially for such as demands and presupposes a pleasurable and genial state of feeling: but, as a case that may by possibility contribute a trifle to the medical history of Opium, in a 10 further stage of its action than can often have been brought under the notice of professional men, he has judged that it might be acceptable to some readers to have it described more at length. °Fiat experimentum in corpore vili is a just rule where there is any reason- 15 able presumption of benefit to arise on a large scale; what the benefit may be will admit of a doubt; but there can be none as to the value of the body: for a more worthless body than his own, the author is free to confess, cannot be. It is his pride to believe that 20 it is the very ideal of a base, crazy, despicable human system — that hardly ever could have been meant to be sea-worthy for two days under the ordinary storms and wear-and-tear of life: and indeed, if that were the creditable way of disposing of human bodies, he 25 must own that he should almost be ashamed to bequeath his wretched structure to any respectable dog. — But now to the case; which, for the sake of avoiding the constant recurrence of a cumbersome periph-5 rasis, the author will take the liberty of giving in the first person.

Those who have read the Confessions will have closed them with the impression that I had wholly renounced the use of Opium. This impression I meant 10 to convey: and that for two reasons: first, because the very act of deliberately recording such a state of suffering necessarily presumes in the recorder a power of surveying his own case as a cool spectator, and a degree of spirits for adequately describing it, which
15 it would be inconsistent to suppose in any person speaking from the station of an actual sufferer: secondly, because I, who had descended from so large a quantity as 8,000 drops to so small a one (comparatively speaking) as a quantity ranging between 300
20 and 160 drops, might well suppose that the victory was in effect achieved. In suffering my readers, therefore, to think of me as of a reformed opium-eater, I left no impression but what I shared myself; and, as may be seen, even this impression was left to be collected from the general tone of the conclusion, and not from any specific words—which are in no instance at variance with the literal truth. — In no long time after that paper was written, I became sensible that the effort which remained would cost me far more energy than I had anticipated: and the necessity for making it was more apparent every month. In particular I became aware of an increasing callousness or defect of sensibility in the stomach; and this I imagined might imply a scirrhus state of that organ either formed or forming. An eminent physician, to whose kindness I was at that time deeply indebted, informed me that such a termination of my case was not impossible, though likely to be forestalled by a different termination, in the event of my continuing the use of opium. Opium therefore I resolved wholly to abjure, as soon as I should find myself at liberty to bend my undivided attention and energy to this purpose. It was not however until the 24th of June last that any tolerable concurrence of facilities for such an attempt arrived. On that day I began my experiment, having previously settled in my own mind that I would not flinch, but would “stand up to the scratch” — under any possible “punishment.” I must premise that about 170 or 180 drops had been my ordinary allowance for many months: occasionally I had run up as high as 500; and once nearly to 700: in repeated preludes to my final experiment I had also gone as low as 100 drops; but had 5 found it impossible to stand it beyond the fourth day — which, by the way, I have always found more difficult to get over than any of the preceding three. I went off under easy sail — 130 drops a day for three days: on the fourth I plunged at once to 80: the 10 misery which I now suffered “took the conceit” out of me at once: and for about a month I continued off and on about this mark: then I sunk to 60: and the next day to — none at all. This was the first day for nearly ten years that I had existed without opium.

15 I persevered in my abstinence for 90 hours; i.e. upwards of half a week. Then I took — ask me not how much: say, ye severest, what would ye have done? Then I abstained again: then took about 25 drops: then abstained: and so on.

20 Meantime the symptoms which attended my case for the first six weeks of the experiment were these: — enormous irritability and excitement of the whole system: the stomach in particular restored to a full feeling of vitality and sensibility; but often in great
25 pain: unceasing restlessness night and day: sleep —

I scarcely knew what it was: three hours out of the twenty-four was the utmost I had, and that so agitated and shallow that I heard every sound that was near me: lower jaw constantly swelling: mouth ulcerated: and many other distressing symptoms that would be tedious to repeat; amongst which however I must mention one, because it had never failed to accompany any attempt to renounce opium — viz. violent sternutation. This now became exceedingly troublesome: sometimes lasting for two hours at once, and recurring at least twice or three times a day. I was not much surprised at this, on recollecting what I had somewhere heard or read, that the membrane which lines the nostrils is a prolongation of that which lines the stomach; whence, I believe, are explained the inflammatory appearances about the nostrils of dram drinkers. The sudden restoration of its original sensibility to the stomach expressed itself, I suppose, in this way. It is remarkable also that, during the whole period of years through which I had taken opium, I had never once caught cold (as the phrase is), nor even the slightest cough. But now a violent cold attacked me, and a cough soon after. In an unfinished fragment of a letter begun about this time to — I find these words: “You ask me to write the — ——. Do you know °Beaumont and Fletcher's play of Thierry and Theodoret? There you will see my case as to sleep: nor is it much of an exaggeration in other features. — I protest to you that I have a 5 greater influx of thoughts in one hour at present than in a whole year under the reign of opium. It seems as though all the thoughts which had been frozen up for a decad of years by opium, had now, according to the °old fable, been thawed at once — such a multitude 10 stream in upon me from all quarters. Yet such is my impatience and hideous irritability — that, for one which I detain and write down, fifty escape me: in spite of my weariness from suffering and want of sleep, I cannot stand still or sit for two minutes together.

15 ° ‘I nunc, et versus tecum meditare canoros.’”

At this stage of my experiment I sent to a neighbouring surgeon, requesting that he would come over to see me. In the evening he came: and after briefly stating the case to him, I asked this question: — 20 Whether he did not think that the opium might have acted as a stimulus to the digestive organs; and that the present state of suffering in the stomach, which manifestly was the cause of the inability to sleep, might arise from indigestion? His answer was — 25 No: on the contrary he thought that the suffering was caused by digestion itself — which should naturally go on below the consciousness, but which from the unnatural state of the stomach, vitiated by so long a use of opium, was become distinctly perceptible. This opinion was plausible: and the uninter- 5 mitting nature of the suffering disposes me to think that it was true: for, if it had been any mere irregular affection of the stomach, it should naturally have inter-mitted occasionally, and constantly fluctuated as to degree. The intention of nature, as manifested in 10 the healthy state, obviously is — to withdraw from our notice all the vital motions, such as the circulation of the blood, the expansion and contraction of the lungs, the peristaltic action of the stomach, &c.; and opium, it seems, is able in this, as in other in- 15 stances, to counteract her purposes. — By the advice of the surgeon I tried bitters: for a short time these greatly mitigated the feelings under which I laboured:

but about the forty-second day of the experiment the symptoms already noticed began to retire, and new 20 ones to arise of a different and far more tormenting class: under these, but with a few intervals of remission, I have since continued to suffer. But I dismiss them undescribed for two reasons: 1st, because the mind revolts from retracing circumstantially any suf- 25

ferings from which it is removed by too short or by no interval: to do this with minuteness enough to make the review of any use — would be indeed “infandum renovare dolorem,” and possibly without a sufficient motive: for 2dly, I doubt whether this latter state be anyway referable to opium — positively considered, or even negatively; that is, whether it is to be numbered amongst the last evils from the direct action of opium, or even amongst the earliest evils consequent upon a want of opium in a system long deranged by its use. Certainly one part of the symptoms might be accounted for from the time of year (August): for, though the summer was not a hot one, yet in any case the sum of all the heat funded (if one may say so) during the previous months, added to the existing heat of that month, naturally renders August in its better half the hottest part of the year: and it so happened that the excessive perspiration, which even at Christmas attends any great reduction in the daily quantum of opium — and which in July was so violent as to oblige me to use a bath five or six times a day, had about the setting in of the hottest season wholly retired: on which account any bad effect of the heat might be the more unmitigated. Another symptom, viz. what in my ignorance I call internal rheumatism (sometimes affecting the shoulders, &c., but more often appearing to be seated in the stomach), seemed again less probably attributable to the opium or the want of opium than to the dampness of the house which I inhabit, which had about that time attained 5 its maximum — July having been, as usual, a month of incessant rain in our most rainy part of England.

Under these reasons for doubting whether opium had any connexion with the latter stage of my bodily wretchedness — (except indeed as an occasional cause, 10 as having left the body weaker and more crazy, and thus predisposed to any mal-influence whatever), — I willingly spare my reader all description of it: let it perish to him: and would that I could as easily say, let it perish to my own remembrances: that any 15 future hours of tranquillity may not be disturbed by too vivid an ideal of possible human misery!

So much for the sequel of my experiment: as to the former stage, in which properly lies the experiment and its application to other cases, I must request 20 my reader not to forget the reasons for which I have recorded it: these were two: 1st, a belief that I might add some trifle to the history of opium as a medical agent: in this I am aware that I have not at all fulfilled my own intentions, in consequence of the 25 torpor of mind — pain of body — and extreme disgust to the subject which besieged me whilst writing that part of my paper; which part, being immediately sent off to the press (distant about five degrees of latitude), cannot be corrected or improved. But from this account, rambling as it may be, it is evident that thus much of benefit may arise to the persons most interested in such a history of opium — viz. to Opium-eaters in general — that it establishes, for their consolation and encouragement, the fact that opium may be renounced; and without greater sufferings than an ordinary resolution may support; and by a °pretty rapid course of descent.

To communicate this result of my experiment — was my foremost purpose. 2dly, as a purpose collateral to this, I wished to explain how it had become impossible for me to compose a Third Part in time to accompany this republication: for during the very time of this experiment, the proof-sheets of this reprint were sent to me from London: and such was my inability to expand or to improve them, that I could not even bear to read them over with attention enough to notice the press errors, or to correct any verbal inaccuracies. These were my reasons for troubling my reader with any record, long or short, of experiments relating to so truly base a subject as my own body : and I am earnest with the reader, that he will not forget them, or so far misapprehend me as to believe it possible that I would condescend to °so rascally a subject for its own sake, or indeed for any less 5 object than that of general benefit to others. Such an animal as the self-observing valetudinarian — I know there is : I have met him myself occasionally : and I know that he is the worst imaginable °heautontimoroumenos; aggravating and sustaining, by calling into 10 distinct consciousness, every symptom that would else perhaps — under a different direction given to the thoughts — become evanescent. But as to myself, so profound is my contempt for this undignified and self- 15 ish habit, that I could as little condescend to it as I could to spend my time in watching a poor servant girl — to whom at this moment I hear some lad or other making love at the back of my house. Is it for a Transcendental Philosopher to feel any curiosity on such an occasion ? Or can I, whose life is worth only 20 eight and a half years' purchase, be supposed to have leisure for such trivial employments ? — However, to put this out of question, I shall say one thing, which will perhaps shock some readers : but I am sure it ought not to do so, considering the motives on which 25

I say it. No man, I suppose, employs much of his time on the phenomena of his own body without some regard for it; whereas the reader sees that, so far from looking upon mine with any complacency or regard, I hate it and make it the object of my bitter ridicule and contempt: and I should not be displeased to know that the last indignities which the law inflicts upon the bodies of the worst malefactors might hereafter fall upon it. And, in testification of my sincerity in saying this, I shall make the following offer. Like other men, I have particular fancies about the place of my burial: having lived chiefly in a mountainous region, I rather cleave to the conceit, that a grave in a green churchyard, amongst the ancient and solitary hills, will be a sublimer and more tranquil place of repose for a philosopher than any in the hideous °Golgothas of London. Yet if the gentlemen of Surgeons' Hall think that any benefit can redound to their science from inspecting the appearances in the body of an Opium-eater, let them speak but a word, and I will take care that mine shall be legally secured to them — i.e. as soon as I have done with it myself. Let them not hesitate to express their wishes upon any scruples of false delicacy, and consideration for my feelings: I assure them they will do me too much honour by ‘demonstrating’ on such a crazy body as mine: and it will give me pleasure to anticipate this posthumous revenge and insult inflicted upon that which has caused me so much suffering in this life. Such bequests are not common: reversionary benefits contingent upon the death of the testator are indeed dangerous to announce in many cases: of this we have a remarkable instance in the habits of a °Román prince — who used, upon any notification made to him by rich persons, that they had left him a handsome estate in their wills, to express his entire satisfaction at such arrangements, and his gracious acceptance of those loyal legacies: but then, if the testators neglected to give him immediate possession of the property, if they traitorously “persisted in living” (si vivere perseverarent, as °Suetonius expresses it), he was highly provoked, and took his measures accordingly. In those times, and from one of the worst of the Cæsars, we might expect such conduct: but I am sure that from English surgeons at this day I need look for no expressions of impatience, or of any other feelings, but such as are answerable to that pure love of science and all its interests, which induces me to make such an offer.

Sept. 30, 1822.

NOTES

Page 1, line 13. decent drapery. “All the decent drapery of life is to be rudely torn off.” — BURKE, Reflections on the Revolution in France.

Page 2, line 8. French literature. He here refers to Les Confessions of Jean Jacques Rousseau (1712–1778). Les Confessions was published posthumously, 1782.

l. 8. that part of the German. He refers to such books as Goethe's Die Leiden des jungen Werther, 1774.

Page 3, line 1. humbly to express.

“It was a solitary mound ;
Which two spears' length of level ground
Did from all other graves divide :
As if in some respect of pride ;
Or melancholy's sickly mood,
Still shy of human neighbourhood ;
Or guilt, that humbly would express
A penitential loneliness.”

— WORDSWORTH, The White Doe of Rylstone, Canto I.

Page 4, line 3. not yet recorded. “‘Not yet recorded,’ I say : for there is one celebrated man [Coleridge] of the present day, who, if all be true which is reported of him, has greatly exceeded me in quantity.” — De Quincey's Note.

Page 5, line 3. William Wilberforce (1759–1833), the famous philanthropist, advocate of Catholic Emancipation, and of the abolition of the Slave Trade. The original text has a comma after Wilberforce.

1. 4. the late Dean of Carlisle. Dr. Isaac Milner (1750–1820). He was an intimate friend of Wilberforce. Elected president of Queen's College, Cambridge, 1788. Presented to the deanery of Carlisle, 1791.

1. 4. Lord Erskine. Thomas Erskine (1750–1823), the noted orator and lawyer.

1. 5. Mr. —, the philosopher. “Who is Mr. Dash, the philosopher? Really I have forgot. Not through any fault of my own, but on the motion of some absurd coward having a voice potential at the press, all the names [in this sentence] were struck out behind my back in the first edition of the book, thirty-five years ago. I was not consulted, and did not discover the absurd blanks until some months afterwards, when I was taunted with them very reasonably by a caustic reviewer. Nothing could have a more ludicrous effect than this appeal to shadows — to my Lord Dash, to Dean Dash, and to Mr. Secretary Dash. Very naturally it thus happened to Mr. Philosopher Dash that his burning light, alas! was extinguished irrecoverably in the general mêlée. Meantime, there was no excuse whatever for this absurd interference, such as might have been alleged in any personality capable of causing pain to any one person concerned. All the cases, except, perhaps, that of Wilberforce (about which I have at this moment some slight lingering doubts), were matters of notoriety to large circles of friends. It is due to

Mr. John Taylor, the accomplished publisher of the work, that I should acquit him of any share in this absurdity." — De Quincey's Note (ed. 1856).

l. 5. a late Under-Secretary of State. Mr. Addington, brother of Henry Addington first Lord Sidmouth (who succeeded Pitt as Prime Minister in 1800).

l. 10. Mr. Coleridge. Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1772–1834), poet and critic; best known by his Ancient Mariner and Kubla Khan, poems closely related to the "visions" of the Confessions.

Page 6, line 20. That those eat now, etc. An adaptation of the refrain in the Pervigilium Veneris, an anonymous Latin poem of the second or third century A.D.:—

"Cras amet qui nunquam amavit, quique amavit cras amet," which Parnell (1679–1718) thus paraphrases:—

"Let those love now, who never lov'd before, Let those who always lov'd, now love the more."

l. 24. Awsiter. John Awsiter, M.D. Died 1768.

Page 7, line 3. Mead. Richard Mead (1673–1754), Physician to George II.

l. 6. φωναυτα συνετοισι. From Pindar (B.C. 522–443), Olympian Odes, 2, l. 152, meaning, "a word to the wise," or "a word to those in the secret." This line is the legend of Gray's The Progress of Poesy.

Page 8, line 21. whose talk is of oxen. "How can he get wisdom that holdeth the plow, and that glorieth in the goad, that driveth oxen, and is occupied in their labours, and whose talk is of bullocks?" — Ecclesiasticus xxxviii. 25.

Page 9, line 5. Humani nihil a se alienum putat. An adaptation of the famous line in Terence's (about B.C. 195-159) play, Heautontimorumenos: "Homo sum : humani nihil a me alienum puto."

l. 14. Samuel Taylor Coleridge. See note to p. 5, l. 10.

l. 16. David Ricardo (1772-1823). His most important book, The Principles of Political Economy and Taxation (1817), laid the foundations of the "classical" political economy more securely than even Adam Smith. "A third exception might perhaps have been added : and my reason for not adding that exception is chiefly because it was only in his juvenile efforts that the writer whom I allude to, expressly addressed himself to philosophical themes ; his riper powers having been all dedicated (on very excusable and very intelligible grounds, under the present direction of the popular mind in England) to criticism and the Fine Arts. Apart, however, I doubt whether he is not rather to be considered an acute thinker than a subtle one. It is, besides, a great drawback on his mastery over philosophical subjects that he has obviously not had the advantage of a regular scholastic education : he has not read Plato in his youth (which most likely was only his misfortune), but neither has he read Kant in his manhood (which is his fault)." — De Quincey's Note. The "third exception" is probably William Hazlitt (1778-1830), according to Garnett.

l. 18. inner eye. Compare Wordsworth, The Daffodils, "inward eye."

l. 24. Scottish professors. "I disclaim any allusion to existing professors, of whom indeed I know only one." — De Quin- cey's Note. He refers to John Wilson, commonly known as Christopher North (1785-1854), Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh, and author of Noctes Ambrosianæ, a series of papers which appeared in Blackwood's Magazine from 1822 to 1833. He was one of De Quincey's most intimate friends.

Page 10, line 19. a most painful affection of the stomach. "I have, I believe, now fully established my proposition that gastrodynia in its aggravated form is a terrible and distressing disease; and, in an aggravated form, I believe that Thomas De Quincey suffered from it." — From Appendix I. of JAPP, Thomas De Quincey: His Life and Writings. (A Medical View of De Quincey's Case, by Surgeon-Major W. C. B. Eatwell, M.D.)

Page 12, line 6. He who . . . scholar. Mr. Morgan, of Bath Grammar School, where De Quincey was from 1796 to 1798.

1. 7. a ripe and a good one.

"He was a scholar, and a ripe and good one."

— Henry VIII., IV., ii., 51.

Spoken of Cardinal Wolsey, by Griffith.

1. 11. blockhead. Rev. Edward Spencer, rector of Winkfield, to whose private school De Quincey was transferred from Bath School, in 1799, after a short trial of home tuition.

1. 13. respectable scholar. Mr. Lawson, head of the Manchester Grammar School, where De Quincey was sent, in 1800, very much against his will, and from which he ran away (as he tells us in the Confessions) in July, 1802.

Page 13, line 5. sacrifice to the graces. "The Graces are the goddesses of grace, and of everything which lends charm and beauty to nature and human life. Their names are Euphrosyné (Joy), Thalia (Bloom), and Aglía (Brilliance).” — Harper's Classical Dictionary. Hence the phrase means “to write poetry.”

l. 6. Sophocles. Born about B.C. 495, in the deme of Colonus, near Athens. He brought Greek tragedy to its perfection. He died B.C. 405.

l. 8. Archididasculus. A humorous use of the Greek word for “head-master.”

l. 15. epigrams. The Greek epigram was simply a short poem written in the elegiac couplet. The epigram with a point was a Roman invention. It is probable that De Quincey uses it in this latter sense, thus defined by Scaliger:—

“The qualities rare in a bee that we meet,
In an epigram never should fail:
The body should always be little and sweet,
And a sting should be left in its tail.”

Page 14, line 14. a woman of high rank. “For the last three years, in particular, Lady Carbery, a young woman some ten years older than myself, and who was as remarkable for her intellectual pretensions as she was for her beauty and benevolence, had maintained a correspondence with me upon questions of literature.” — Confessions (ed. 1856), Works, III., p. 280. Her maiden name was Watson, and she had taken a warm interest in De Quincey from his childhood.

Page 15, line 7. a just remark of Dr. Johnson's. In his last essay in The Idler (No. 103, Saturday, April 5, 1760) entitled

The Horror of the Last: "There are few things not purely evil, of which we can say, without some emotion of uneasiness, this is the last." Samuel Johnson (1709-1784), is perhaps the greatest man of letters in English literature, and is the subject of the greatest biography in English — Boswell's Life of Johnson.

Page 16, line 15. dress in earliest light. The editor has not been able to find the source of this quotation.

Page 17, line 11. pensive citadel.

"Nuns fret not at their convent's narrow room;
And hermits are contented with their cells;
And students with their pensive citadels. . . ."

— WORDSWORTH, Nuns Fret Not.

l. 17. dedicated to intellectual pursuits. Compare Wordsworth's statement that he felt himself "a dedicated Spirit." — The Prelude, Bk. IV.

Page 18, line 2. the lovely —. "The housekeeper was in the habit of telling me that the lady had lived (meaning, perhaps, had been born) two centuries ago; that date would better agree with the tradition that the portrait was a copy from Vandyke. All that she knew further about the lady was that either to the Grammar school, or to that particular college at Oxford with which the school was connected, or else to that particular college at Oxford with which Mr. Lawson personally was connected, or else, fourthly, to Mr. Lawson himself as a private individual, the unknown lady had been a special benefactress. She was also a special benefactress to me through eighteen months by means of her sweet Madonna countenance. And in some degree it serves to spiritualize and to hallow this service that of her who unconsciously rendered it I knew neither the name, nor the exact rank or age, nor the place where she lived and died. She was parted from me by perhaps two centuries; I from her by the gulf of eternity." — De Quincey's Note (ed. 1856).

1. 12. So blended and intertisted . . . tears. Compare Shelley, To a Skylark, st. 18: —

“Our sincerest laughter
With some pain is fraught;

Our sweetest songs are those that tell of saddest thought.”

Page 19, lines 7–8. of Atlantean shoulders. Adapted from Milton's description of Beelzebub: —

“. . . Sage he stood
With Atlantean shoulders, fit to bear
The weight of mightiest monarchies.”

— Paradise Lost, I., 304–307.

1. 9. Salisbury plain. An undulating plateau, near Salisbury, in Wilts, in the midst of which Stonehenge is situated. Formerly a sterile tract, it has been converted into a fertile district by the advance of agriculture.

Page 20, line 4. contretems. The standard spelling is “contretemps.” French for “mishap.”

1. 6. the Seven Sleepers. “Seven Christians of Ephesus who, according to the story of Gregory of Tours fled to a cave at the time of the persecution under the emperor Decius in the third century, and there fell into a sleep that lasted for nearly two hundred years. Returning to the city, they experienced the surprise that Rip Van Winkle felt on his famous return, and at last discovered the truth regarding their sleep. Having had an interview with the emperor, and convinced him of the life beyond the grave, they sank into a second sleep that is to last until the Resurrection." — Harper's Classical Dictionary.

l. 10. étourderie. French for "blunder." In the edition of 1856 "comic wilfulness" is substituted.

l. 24. with Providence my guide. Adapted from Milton: —

"The world was all before them, where to choose Their place of rest, and Providence their guide."

— Paradise Lost, XII., 646-647.

Page 21, line 2. a favourite English poet. Doubtless a volume of Wordsworth's early poems.

l. 4. Euripides. Born B. C. 480, in Salamis. The last of the three great Greek dramatists — Æschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides. He died B. C. 406. He seems to have been a favorite writer of De Quincey's.

l. 7. other personal accounts. "Amongst the attractions that drew me so strongly to the Lakes, there had also by that time arisen in this lovely region the deep, deep magnet (as to me only in all this world it then was) of William Wordsworth." — Edition of 1856, Works, III., p. 283.

l. 7. Accident, however, gave a different direction. The "accident" is explained at very great length in the edition of 1856.

Page 22, line 7. Not to know them, etc. Adapted from Milton: "Not to know me argues yourselves unknown." — Paradise Lost, IV., 830.

l. 24. noli me tangere. "Touch me not."

Page 23, line 1. οἱ πολλοί, the common people, the commonalty.

Page 27, line 6. Westmoreland. In this case the spelling of the original text is Westmorland.

Page 29, line 12. Greek Sapphics or Alcaics. Sappho and Alcæus were contemporaries, toward the end of the seventh century B.C. They lived in Lesbos, and were the two great leaders of the Æolian school of Greek lyric poetry. The following stanza from A. C. Swinburne's Sapphics, referring to Sappho, is in the Sapphic metre:—

"Ah the singing, ah the delight, the passion!
All the Loves wept, listening; sick with anguish, Stood the crowned nine Muses about Apollo;
Fear was upon them. . . ."

Tennyson's Milton is an imitation of the Alcaic metre:—

"O mighty-mouthed inventor of harmonies,
O skill'd to sing of Time or Eternity,
God-gifted organ-voice of England, Milton, a name to resound for ages. . . ."

l. 16. Mr. Shelley is right . . . old age. Revolt of Islam, IV., v.—x., where he describes the "gentle Hermit," whose "heart had grown old, but had corrupted not," because "all the ways of man among mankind he read."

l. 21. means which I must omit for want of room. Given fully in the edition of 1856, Works, III., pp. 339-348.

Page 33, line 6. the plan of Cromwell. "Cromwell . . . rarely lodged two nights together in one chamber, but had many furnished and prepared." — CLARENDON, History of the Rebellion, Bk. XV. — Quoted by Hunter.

Page 34, line 9. Blue-beard room. The room in which Bluebeard kept the bodies of his murdered wives, and into which he forbade his wife to go ; hence, a forbidden room. See the familiar tale of Bluebeard.

l. 12. Whether this child, etc. "Dickens must have had the whole situation in his mind when he drew the Marchioness and Sally Brass in his Old Curiosity Shop." — GARNETT.

l. 19. Tartarus. "In the Iliad, Tartarus is a place beneath the earth, as far below Hades as Heaven is above the earth, and closed by iron gates. Later poets use the name as synonymous with Hades." — Harper's Classical Dictionary.

Page 35, line 12. laying down. That is, "finding them too expensive." — DE QUINCEY.

l. 20. cycle and epicycle.

". . . how gird the Sphere
With Centric and Eccentric scribbled o'er, Cycle and Epicycle, Orb in Orb."

— MILTON, Paradise Lost, VIII., 82-84.

Page 36, line 6. Dr. Johnson . . . wall-fruit. Recorded in Mrs. Piozzi's Anecdotes of the Late Dr. Samuel Johnson.

l. 12. the world was all before us. See note to p. 20, l. 24, for the source of this.

Page 37, line 3. eighteen years ago. In a Notice to the Reader in the October, 1821, London Magazine, De Quincey has corrected this to nineteen, explaining that the incidents recorded, in the Preliminary Confessions lie between the early part of July, 1802, and the beginning of March, 1803.

Page 38, line 2. Sine Cerere, etc. "Sine Cerere et Libero friget Venus." — TERENCE, Eunuchus, IV., v. 6. "Without bread and wine love grows cold."

l. 5. But the truth is, etc. In this and the following sentence De Quincey anticipates a large part of Walt Whitman's message.

l. 10. more Socratico. "After the manner of Socrates, who never opened a school and never lectured publicly, nor did he receive any money for teaching, but went about in the most public parts of Athens, such as the market place, the gymnasia, and the work shops, seeking opportunity for awakening in the young and old alike moral consciousness and an impulse toward self-knowledge with respect to the end and value of human action." — Harper's Classical Dictionary.

l. 16. poor liminary creature. Compare Milton, "proud liminary Cherub," Paradise Lost, IV., 971.

Page 42, line 17. to chace — to haunt — to waylay. Reminiscent of Wordsworth, She was a Phantom of Delight: "To haunt, to startle, and waylay."

l. 25. too deep for tears. From Wordsworth, Ode on the Intimations of Immortality, last line.

Page 43, line 14. Yet some feelings . . . for ever. Compare, for a more extended expression of a similar idea, in a similar rhythm, Robert Louis Stevenson's Dedication of David Balfour: "You are still—as when first I saw, as when last I addressed you—in the venerable city which I must always think of as my home. And I have come so far; and the sights and thoughts of my youth pursue me; and I see like a vision the youth of my father, and of his father, and the whole stream of lives flowing down there, far in the north, with the sound of laughter and tears, to cast me out in the end, as by a sudden freshet, on these ultimate islands. And I admire and bow my head before the strange romance of destiny."

Page 44, line 2. his late Majesty's. George the Third's.

l. 18. soliciting. That is, "advocating."

Page 46, line 25. Doctor's Commons. So called because the Doctors of Civil Law dined here together four days in each term. In De Quincey's time it also included a registry of wills. See Dickens, David Copperfield, for a description of Doctors' Commons.

Page 47, line 2. Thomas Quincey. It was our author's mother who added the de to the family name.

ll. 12 and 15. materialiter . . . formaliter. That is, he humorously explains that he found himself considered as a material object, counterfeiting himself considered as an object of thought, or idea.

Page 51, line 24. the fine fluent motion. "The Bristol Mail is the best appointed in the kingdom, owing to the double advantage of an unusually good road, and of an extra sum for the expences subscribed by the Bristol merchants." — De Quincey's note. For a description of the "fine fluent motion" of the Mail Coach, and the dreams based on it, see De Quincey's The English Mail Coach.

Page 52, line 13. infinite . . . varieties. Compare Shakespeare's "her infinite variety," Antony and Cleopatra, II., ii., 250.

Page 54, line 18. prettily expressed by a Roman poet. "Cantabit vacuus coram latrone viator." — JUVENAL, Satire X., 22. "The traveller with empty pockets will sing in the face of the robber." Translated by Chaucer:—

"The poure man, whan he goth by the weye, Before the theves he may syng and playe."

— Wife of Bath's Tale, 337-338.

Page 55, line 7. Lord of my learning, etc. Adapted from Shakespeare:—"Lord of thy presence and no land beside." — King John, I., i., 137.

Page 56, lines 2-4. To slacken virtue, etc. Adapted from Milton:—

"To slacken virtue and abate her edge
Than prompt her to do aught may merit praise."

— Paradise Regained, II., 455-456.

Page 57, line 3. eight o'clock. The original text has a comma after eight, evidently a misprint.

1. 4. Pote's. Joseph Pote (1703?-1787) kept a boarding-house for the Etonians, and was an editor and publisher as well. The business was continued by his son.

1. 9. Ibi omnis effusus labor !

“ Ibi omnis
effusus labor atque immitis rupta tyranni fœdera terque fragor stagnis auditus Averni.”

“There all his toil was spilt, and the treaty broken with that merciless monarch ; and thrice a thunder pealed over the pools of Avernus.”—VIRGIL, Georgics, IV., 491–493 (Mackail’s Translation). From the affecting story of Orpheus and Eurydice, as told by Virgil.

Page 58, line 3. himself, anonymously, an author. His book is entitled A Short Tour in the Midland Counties of England, performed in the Summer of 1772: together with an Account of a Similar Excursion undertaken September, 1772. Published in 1775. “Though in the form of brief, business-like notes, the performance is altogether very creditable.”—MASSON.

1. 12. her letters. Compare his general statement with regard to the purity of female English : “Would you desire at this day to read our noble language in its native beauty, picturesque from idiomatic propriety, racy in its phraseology, delicate yet sinewy in its composition, steal the mail-bags, and break open all the letters in female handwriting.”—Essay on Style, Works, X., p. 145.

1. 16. M. W. Montague. Lady Mary Wortley Montagu (1689–1762). “It was her habit . . . to write copiously to friends at home, and when a selection from these letters was published, in 1763, Lady Mary was recognized as having been the wittiest of English letter-writers.”—GOSSE, History of Eighteenth Century Literature, p. 205.

Page 59, line 1. good man's table. Probably an adaptation of "If ever sat at any good man's feast." — SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It, II., vii., 115.

l. 8. The story about Otway. Thomas Otway (1625–1685). Dramatist, author of The Orphan and Venice Preserved. The incident referred to by De Quincey is mentioned by an early biographer, who says that one day Otway sallied forth from an obscure public-house, and begged a shilling from a gentleman in a coffee-house, saying, "I am the poet, Otway." This person, surprised and distressed, gave him a guinea. With it he bought a roll of bread, and began to devour it with the rage of hunger; but, incapable of swallowing it from long abstinence, he was choked with the first mouthful. — RODEN NOEL.

Page 61, line 16. Saracen's head. De Quincey has in mind the representations of bronzed and beturbaned Saracens' heads, often painted as signs over inn doors.

Page 64, line 11. Magdalen. See St. Luke vii. 36–50.

l. 14. the ruin they had begun. At this point the portion printed in the September number of the London Magazine ends. An editorial note says, "The remainder of this very interesting Article will be given in the next number."

Page 66, line 21. the road . . . North . . . Grasmere. Wordsworth was then living at Grasmere. De Quincey had once actually gone to Westmoreland to call on Wordsworth, but an overwhelming shyness and reverence caused him to turn back when he was at the very door.

l. 22. wings of a dove. "And I said, Oh that I had wings like a dove! for then would I fly away, and be at rest." — Ps. lv. 6.

Page 67, line 1. that very house. In 1821 De Quincey was living in Dove Cottage, in which Wordsworth lived in 1803.

l. 9. blessed balm. "φιλον ὕπνου θελγητρον ἐπικουρον νοσου." — De Quincey's Note. In this paragraph there are many echoes of Euripides' Orestes. This line opens a scene closely resembling the one before us. (For the explanation of the situation, see note to p. 68, l. 16.)

"Orestes. O balmy sleep, the sick man's comforter, Timely and sweet thy coming was, blest power,
That timely steeps pain in forgetfulness
And art misfortune's kindest deity,
How came I here? What brought me to this place?
My mind, distraught, remembers not the past.

Electra. How glad was I, dearest, to see thee sleep.
Shall I take hold of thee, and lift thee up?

Orestes. Yes, yes, and wipe from my unhappy mouth
And from my eyes the clotted gouts of foam.

Electra. Sweet is the labour. Never shall I tire
Of rendering thee a sister's offices.

[He is seized with another fit of madness. He recovers, and speaks.]

Orestes. After the storm again behold a calm.
Listen, why dost thou veil thy head and weep?
I blush to make thee partner in my woes
And trouble with my sickness thy young soul."

— Translated by Goldwin Smith.

1. 18. Eumenides. The name Eumenides signifies “the well-meaning goddesses,” and is a euphemism for the real name “Furies,” because the Greeks dreaded to call the fearful goddesses by their real name.

1. 23. Margaret. Margaret Simpson, who became his wife in 1816.

Page 68, line 3. servile ministrations. “ἡδὺ δουλευμα. — EURIP. Orest.” — De Quincey's Note. Translated “sweet is the labour” in the quotation from the Orestes in the note to p. 67, l. 9.

1. 10. sleep no more!

“Macbeth. Methought I heard a voice cry, ‘Sleep no more! Macbeth doth murder sleep,’ the innocent sleep, Sleep that knits up the ravell’d sleeve of care, The death of each day’s life, sore labour’s bath, Balm of hurt minds, great nature’s second course, Chief nourisher in life’s feast, —

Lady Macbeth. What do you mean?

Macbeth. Still it cried, ‘Sleep no more!’ to all the house: ‘Glamis hath murder’d sleep, and therefore Cawdor Shall sleep no more; Macbeth shall sleep no more.’”

— SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth, II., ii., 35–43.

1. 15. king of men. “ἀναξάνδρων Ἀγαμεμνων.” — De Quincey's Note. One of the many epithets Homer applies to Agamemnon.

1. 16. hid her face in her robe. “ὄμμα θεισ’ εἰσω πεπλων. The scholar will know that throughout this passage I refer to the early scenes of the Orestes; one of the most beautiful exhibitions of the domestic affections which even the dramas of Euripides can furnish. To the English reader, it may be necessary to say, that the situation at the opening of the drama is that of a brother attended only by his sister during the demoniacal possession of a suffering conscience (or, in the mythology of the play, haunted by the Furies), and in circumstances of immediate danger from enemies, and of desertion or cold regard from nominal friends." — De Quincey's Note. This expression is translated in a quotation in the note to p. 67, l. 9 — "Why dost thou veil thy head?"

Page 71, line 7. the stately Pantheon.

"Near the stately Pantheon you'll meet with the same In the street that from Oxford hath borrowed its name."

— WORDSWORTH, Power of Music, 3-4.

"The Pantheon . . . has successively been a concert-room, a theatre, and a bazaar, and is now the extensive wine warehouse of the Messrs. Gibley." — Bædeker's London (1885).

Page 72, line 4. evanesced. "Evanesced — this way of going off the stage of life appears to have been well known in the 17th century, but at that time to have been considered a peculiar privilege of blood-royal, and by no means to be allowed to druggists. For about the year 1686 a poet of rather ominous name (and who, by the by, did ample justice to his name), viz., Mr. Flat-man, in speaking of the death of Charles II. expresses his surprise that any prince should commit so absurd an act as dying; because, says he, 'Kings should disdain to die, and only disappear.' They should abscond, that is, into the other world." — De Quincey's Note. Thomas Flatman (1637-1688) published in 1685 a Pindarique Ode on the Death of King Charles II. — HUNTER.

1. 20. φαρμακον νήπενθες.

ἀντίκ' ἄρ' εἰς οἶνον βάλε φάρμακον, ἔνθεν ἔπινον νηπενθές τ' ἄχολόν τε, κακῶν ἐπίληθον ἀπάντων.

— HOMER, Odyssey, IV., 220–221.

“Presently she cast a drug into the wine whereof they drank, a drug to lull all pain and anger, and bring forgetfulness of every sorrow.” See Milton, Comus, 675, for Nepenthes.

Page 73, lines 7–8. l'Allegro . . . Il Penseroso. The companion poems of Milton, representing the moods of light cheerfulness and thoughtful melancholy, respectively.

1. 25. ex cathedra. Literally, “from the chair,” i.e. “with authority.”

Page 74, line 17. die. “Of this, however, the learned appear latterly to have doubted: for in a pirated edition of Buchan’s Domestic Medicine, which I once saw in the hands of a farmer’s wife who was studying it for the benefit of her health, the Doctor was made to say — ‘Be particularly careful never to take above five-and-twenty ounces of laudanum at once;’ the true reading being probably five-and-twenty drops, which are held equal to about one grain of crude opium.” — De Quincey’s Note.

Page 75, line 3. meo periculo. “At my risk.”

Page 77, line 6. ponderibus librata suis. “Poised by its own weight.” — OVID, Metamorphoses, I., 13.

1. 11. Athenæus. A Greek scholar who lived in the second and third centuries A.D. He wrote Δειπνοσοφισταί (Banquet of the Learned) in fifteen books. It ranges over numberless subjects connected with domestic and social life, manners and customs, trade, art, and science. — Harper's Classical Dictionary.

Page 78, line 9. unscientific authors. “ Amongst the great herd of travellers, &c. who show sufficiently by their stupidity that they never held any intercourse with opium, I must caution my readers specially against the brilliant author of ‘Anastasius.’ This gentleman, whose wit would lead one to presume him an opium-eater, has made it impossible to consider him in that character from the grievous misrepresentation which he gives of its effects, at p. 215–17, of vol. 1. — Upon consideration, it must appear such to the author himself: for, waiving the errors I have insisted on in the text, which (and others) are adopted in the fullest manner, he will himself admit, that an old gentleman ‘with a snow-white beard,’ who eats ‘ample doses of opium,’ and is yet able to deliver what is meant and received as very weighty counsel on the bad effects of that practice, is but an indifferent evidence that opium either kills people prematurely, or sends them into a madhouse. But, for my part, I see into this old gentleman and his motives: the fact is, he was enamoured of ‘the little golden receptacle of the pernicious drug’ which Anastasius carried about him; and no way of obtaining it so safe and so feasible occurred, as that of frightening its owner out of his wits (which, by the bye, are none of the strongest). This commentary throws a new light upon the case, and greatly improves it as a story: for the old gentleman’s speech, considered as a lecture on pharmacy, is highly absurd: but, considered as a hoax on Anastasius, it reads excellently.” — De Quincey's Note.

Anastasius: or, Memoirs of a Greek, Written at the Close of the Eighteenth Century. (Published 1819.) By Thomas Hope (1770?–1831). “A marvel of erudition, eloquence, and profound insight into human character. . . . Lord Byron was singled out as the only living writer equal to the performance, which is said to have flattered the poet’s pride. . . . In language notable for acute characterization and bold imagery the author presents a faithful picture of Turkish history and civilization, interweaving its weeds and flowers, its hates and loves, its license and fanaticism.”—Atlantic Monthly, Vol. XL., pp. 97–99.

“It is sufficient to say of this novel . . . that some critics, including Baron Bunsen, praise it as of deeper ethical import than any of Scott’s.”—DAVID MASSON, British Novelists and their Styles (1859).

l. 23. primâ facie. “At first view or appearance.”

Page 81, line 1. With respect to the torpor, etc. But see Rudyard Kipling’s story, The Gate of the Hundred Sorrows, for a picture of the “torpor.”

l. 12. exhibition. The act of administering a remedy.

Page 82, line 19. Grassini. Josephina Grassini (1773–1850), a favorite contralto in London from 1803 to 1806.

Page 83, lines 10–11. Andromache . . . Hector. Probably in Cimarosa’s opera, Achilles at the Siege of Troy (1798). At any rate she sang Cimarosa during her visits to London.

l. 19. the fine extravaganza . . . Twelfth Night.

“If music be the food of love, play on;
Give me excess of it, that, surfeiting,

The appetite may sicken, and so die.
 That strain again! It had a dying fall :
 O, it came o'er my ear like the sweet sound,
 That breathes upon a bank of violets,
 Stealing and giving odour." — I., i., 1-7.

1. 22. a passage in the Religio Medici. "Whosoever is harmonically composed delights in harmony ; which makes me much distrust the symmetry of those heads which disclaim against all Church-Musick. For myself, not only from my obedience, but my particular Genius, I do embrace it: for even that vulgar and Tavern-Musick, which makes one man merry, another mad, strikes in me a deep fit of devotion, and a profound contemplation of the First Composer. There is something in it of Divinity more than the ear discovers: it is an Hieroglyphical and shadowed lesson of the whole World, and creatures of GOD ; such a melody to the ear, as the whole World, well understood, would afford the understanding. In brief, it is a sensible fit of that harmony which intellectually sounds in the ears of God." — Part II., § 9.

Sir Thomas Browne (1605-1682) published the Religio Medici in 1642.

For a similar interpretation of music see Plato, Republic, 401 ; Browning, A Toccata of Galuppi's and Abt Vogler ; and Du Maurier, The Martian, Part V.

Pages 84-85, lines 19-2. But this is a subject . . . sublimed. Compare D. G. Rossetti, The Monochord.

Page 85, line 9. Weld the traveller. Isaac Weld, Travels through the United States . . . and Canada, 1799. The passage is as follows : "The women, on the contrary, speak with the utmost ease, and the language, as pronounced by them, appears as soft as Italian. They have, without exception, the most delicate harmonious voices I have ever heard, and the most pleasing gentle laugh that it is possible to conceive. I have oftentimes sat amongst a group of them for an hour or two together, merely for the pleasure of listening to their conversation, on account of its wonderful softness and delicacy." — Quoted by Garnett.

l. 23. Marinus . . . Proclus. Marinus was pupil and biographer of Proclus. Proclus was born A.D. 412, at Byzantium. He became head of the Platonic school, and directed his efforts towards opposing the Platonic philosophy to the encroachments of Christianity. He died in 484.

Page 86, line 3. labours that I rested from. See Revelation xiv. 13.

Page 88, line 9. soot. "On enquiry I found that soot (chiefly from wood and peats) was useful in some stage of their wax or honey manufacture." — De Quincey's Note.

l. 24. terræ incognitæ. "Unknown lands."

Page 90, line 2. cave of Trophonius. Trophonius was a famous Greek oracle. "Since those who descended into the cave at Labdea to consult the oracle of Trophonius were noticed to return dejected and melancholy, the proverb arose which was applied to a low-spirited person: 'He has been consulting the oracle of Trophonius.'" — GAYLEY, Classic Myths.

l. 17. mysticism. The doctrine that man may attain truth directly, by intuition. This doctrine has become familiarized to readers of English literature by Coleridge and Carlyle.

1. 17. Behmenism. Jakob Boehme (Behmen is the usual English variant form of the name), 1575-1624. A German mystical writer.

1. 18. quietism. The doctrine that the soul attains perfect spiritual exaltation by withdrawing from outward activities and engaging in mystic contemplation.

1. 18. Sir H. Vane, the younger. Sir Henry Vane, born 1613; opposed Laud; emigrated to Massachusetts, of which he became governor in 1636; returned to England, and was executed 1662.

Page 91, line 6. the tumult, the fever, and the strife. For the rhythm compare "The weariness, the fever, and the fret." — KEATS, Ode to a Nightingale, st. 3.

1. 8. resting from human labours. "That they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them." — Revelation xiv. 13.

1. 16. Oh! just . . . opium! etc. Imitative of Sir Walter Raleigh's famous apostrophe to Death: "O eloquent, just, and mighty Death! whom none could advise, thou hast persuaded; what none hath dared, thou hast done; and whom all the world hath flattered, thou only hast cast out of the world and despised; thou hast drawn together all the far-stretched greatness, all the pride, cruelty, and ambition of man, and covered it over with these two narrow words, — Hic jacet!" — History of the World.

l. 18. pangs that tempt the spirit, etc.

“And pangs that tempt the spirit to rebel.”

— WORDSWORTH, White Doe of Rylstone (Dedication).

l. 25. Wrongs unredress'd, etc. Wordsworth, The Excursion, Bk. III.

Page 92, line 6. Phidias. The greatest Greek sculptor (B.C. 490–432). His great works are the Parthenon at Athens and the Olympian Zeus.

l. 7. Praxiteles. Another famous Greek sculptor, born about B.C. 390.

l. 8. Hekatómpylos, “i.e. the hundred-gated (from ἐκατόν, hekatón, a hundred, and πύλη, pyle, a gate). This epithet of hundred-gated was applied to the Egyptian Thebes in contradistinction to the ἑπτάπυλος (heptápylos, or seven-gated) which designated the Grecian Thebes, within one day’s journey of Athens.” — De Quincey’s Note.

l. 8. from the anarchy of dreaming sleep. From Wordsworth, The Excursion, Bk. IV.

l. 11. dishonours of the grave. 1 Corinthians xv. 43: “It is sown in dishonour; it is raised in glory.”—In the Lesson in the Order for the Burial of the Dead of the Church of England.

Page 93, line 5. Bodleian. The famous library at Oxford, founded by Sir Thomas Bodley in 1602.

l. 21. Greek epigrams. See note to p. 13, l. 5.

Page 94, lines 16–17. Kant, Fichte, Schelling. Immanuel Kant (1724–1804), founder of the critical philosophy. Johann Gottlieb Fichte (1762-1814) and Friedrich Wilhelm Joseph von Schelling (1775-1854) were disciples of Kant, though they developed his philosophy in directions little approved of by him.

l. 21. Honi soit, etc. "Shame to him who evil thinks." The motto of Great Britain.

Page 95, line 10. X. Y. Z. De Quincey's pen-name in the London Magazine.

l. 11. Custos Rotulorum. The keeper of the records of the sessions of a county.

Page 96, line 5. Anastasius. See note to p. 78, l. 9.

l. 24. distress of mind . . . event. The death of little Kate Wordsworth. See Works, II., 440-445.

Page 97, line 6. appalling irritation of the stomach. For a medical view of this, see note to p. 10, l. 19.

Page 98, line 16. à force d'ennuyer. "By dint of boring."

l. 17. pandiculation. Humorous use of pedantic terms.

Page 99, line 7. Eudæmonist. One who makes the pursuit of enjoyment and the production of happiness his chief aim.

l. 14. Stoic philosophy. "A handsome news-room, of which I was very politely made free in passing through Manchester by several gentlemen of that place, is called, I think, The Porch: whence I, who am a stranger in Manchester, inferred that the subscribers meant to profess themselves followers of Zeno. But I have been since assured that this is a mistake." — De Quincey's Note.

The Stoic school was founded by Zeno of Citium, A.D. 410. The school was so called because Zeno held his school in the Stoa, or Porch. The system was ascetic, teaching perfect indifference to everything external, for nothing external could be good or evil.

l. 15. Eclectic. One who selects his philosophy from all systems.

l. 18. sweet men, etc.

“ Ful swetely herde he confessioun,
And plesaunt was his absolucioun.”

—CHAUCER, Prologue to Canterbury Tales, 221-222.

Page 100, line 18. snow-white beard. See note to p. 78, l. 9.

Page 102, line 11. νυχθημερον. “ A day and a night.”

l. 14. That moveth altogether, etc. Wordsworth, Resolution and Independence, st. 11. The proper reading is all together.

Page 103, line 20. impassable gulph fixed. See Luke xvi. 26.

Page 105, line 12. Adelung's Mithridates. Johann Christoph Adelung (1732-1806), a German philologist, and librarian at Dresden. The book referred to is entitled Mithridates oder allgemeines Sprachkunde.

Page 107, line 1. a-muck. “ See the common accounts in any Eastern traveller or voyager of the frantic excesses committed by Malays who have taken opium, or are reduced to desperation by ill luck at gambling.” — De Quincey's Note.

Page 108, line 16. a cottage with a double coach-house.

“He passed a cottage with a double coach-house,
A cottage of gentility;
And he owned with a grin
That his favourite sin
Is pride that apes humility.”

— SOUTHEY, The Devil's Walk, st. 8.

An almost identical verse (dictated by Southey) occurs in Coleridge's The Devil's Thoughts.

Page 109, lines 12–15. And at the doors . . . hall. Adapted from James Thomson (1700–1748), Castle of Indolence, st. 43, 5–9.

l. 24. Mr. Clarkson. Thomas Clarkson (1760–1846), a prominent English antislavery agitator.

Page 110, line 13. St. Thomas's day. December 21.

l. 25. bellum internecinum. “War to the death.” — CICERO (B.C. 106–43), Philippic Orations, 14, 3, 7.

Page 111, line 1. Jonas Hanway (1712–1786), “tourist, philanthropist, and author, and said to have been ‘the first man who ventured to walk the streets of London with an umbrella over his head,’ was a violent opponent of tea, and got into conflict with Dr. Johnson on the subject.” — MASSON.

l. 13. a double debt to pay.

“The chest contrived a double debt to pay,
A bed by night, a chest of drawers by day.”

— GOLDSMITH, Deserted Village, 229–230.

Page 112, line 3. à parte ante, from the part (of duration) before a given time; à parte post, from the part (of duration) after a given time. Hence the two expressions mean eternal — without beginning or end.

1. 8. Aurora, the goddess of morning — Homer's "rosy-fingered Dawn." Hebe, the goddess of eternal youth.

Page 113, line 22. the ten categories. Aristotle's ten categories, or predicaments, viz. substance, quantity, quality, relation, place, time, posture, habit (or dress), action, passion.

Page 114, line 5. But now farewell, etc. "Farewell! a long farewell, to all my greatness!" — Henry VIII., III., ii., 351.

11. 6-7. Farewell to smiles and laughter!
Farewell to peace of mind!

Swinburne's poems, Before Dawn and The Garden of Proserpine, as well as Keats's In a Drear-nighted December, are composed of these two rhythms.

1. 11. Iliad of woes. Translation of a phrase in Cicero, Epistulæ ad Atticum, 8, 11, 3. "Malorum . . . 'Ιλιάς."

1. 12. as when some great painter dips, etc. Percy Bysshe Shelley (1792-1822), Revolt of Islam, Canto V., st. 23.

Page 117, line 16. in medias res. "Into the middle of the matter." From Horace (B.C. 65-8) Art of Poetry, 148.

Page 118, line 6. John Kemble (1757-1823), one of the greatest Shakespearean actors.

l. 7. Mrs. Siddons. Sarah Siddons (1755-1831), one of the most celebrated of Shakespearean actresses.

l. 11. overstep the modesty of nature. Shakespeare, Hamlet, III., ii.

l. 13. grand lamentations of Samson Agonistes. See, for instance, the opening speech, ll. 1-114.

l. 14. great harmonies of the Satanic speeches in Paradise Regained. See, for example, that speech beginning, "'Tis true, I am that Spirit unfortunate," Bk. II., 358-405; and also Bk. IV., 44-108, 195-284.

l. 16. a young lady. Doubtless, Dorothy Wordsworth.

Page 119, line 16. Spinosa. Baruch de Spinoza (1632-1677), one of the greatest European philosophers.

l. 18. Spanish bridge. Probably an adaptation of the familiar "castles in Spain."

Page 121, line 7. Mr. Ricardo. See note to p. 9, l. 16.

l. 10. Thou art the man! "And Nathan said to David, Thou art the man!" — 2 Samuel xii. 7.

l. 17. thinking. "The reader must remember what I here mean by thinking: because, else this would be a very presumptuous expression. England, of late, has been rich to excess in fine thinkers, in the departments of creative and combining thought; but there is a sad dearth of masculine thinkers in any analytic path. A Scotchman of eminent name has lately told us, that he is obliged to quit even mathematics, for want of encouragement." — De Quincey's Note.

l. 19. mercantile and senatorial cares. Ricardo was a member of the Stock Exchange and a member of Parliament.

l. 24. deduced à priori. That is, deduced from the laws of the mind.

Page 122, line 11. the inevitable eye. Possibly a reminiscence of Gray's "inevitable hour" in The Elegy, l. 35.

Page 123, line 15. Circean spells. Circe, according to Homer (Iliad, X., 135 ff.), dwelt in the island of Ææa, attended by four nymphs, and all who approached her dwelling were feasted, and then, by means of her magic cup, transformed into beasts.

Page 125, line 15. I can tell them, etc. The reference is to St. Luke vii. 8. Compare St. Matthew viii. 9.

l. 23. friezes of never-ending stories. It was the custom of the Greeks to carve representations of stories on their temples. The frieze of the Parthenon at Athens represented, not a "story," but the Panathenaic procession. The stories were on the pediments; but other temples undoubtedly had stories on the friezes, for instance, the temple of Pergamos.

l. 25. before Ædipus . . . Memphis. Ædipus was king of Thebes; Priam was king of Troy; Tyre, one of the greatest and most famous cities of the ancient world, was the metropolis of Phœnicia; Memphis was a great city of Egypt, and became its capital after the fall of Thebes.

Page 128, line 5. near relative. Mrs. Baird Smith told Dr. Garnett that this was De Quincey's mother.

l. 16. the dread book of account. Revelation xx. 12.

Page 129, line 1. common light of day. Wordsworth, Ode on the Intimations of Immortality, V. ; also To the Highland Girl, 16-17 — “light of common day.”

l. 13. Livy. Titus Livius (B.C. 59-A.D. 17) wrote a history of Rome in one hundred and forty-two books, — the most famous Roman history.

Page 130, line 16. a certain day. August 22, the day on which the royal standard was raised at Nottingham.

ll. 18-19. Marston Moor, etc. Marston Moor, July 12, 1644 ; Newbury, October 16, 1644 ; Naseby, June 14, 1645.

Page 131, line 2. sweeping by. “In sceptered pall come sweeping by.” — MILTON, Il Penseroso, 98.

l. 3. Paulus or Marius. Lucius Paulus, surnamed Macedonicus, born about B.C. 230. Conqueror of Macedonia. His triumphal entry into Rome was the most splendid in Roman history (B.C. 167). Gaius Marius, born B.C. 157, and frequently consul at Rome. He waged a triumphant war against the German hordes, and he was hailed as the saviour of his country. Both are names associated with the pomp of war, hence the reference.

l. 5. alalagmos. “A word expressing collectively the gathering of the Roman war cries — Alála, Alála !” — Masson. Greek, ἀλαλαγμός, a loud noise.

l. 6. Piranesi. Giovanni Battista Piranesi (1720-1778), an Italian architect and engraver. Garnett says that he never published any plates under the title Dreams.

Page 132, line 13. a great modern poet . . . passage. The passage cited is from Wordsworth, The Excursion, Bk. II.

Page 133, line 12. Dryden. John Dryden (1631–1700), the famous eighteenth-century satirist, dramatist, and narrative poet.

1. 13. Fuseli. Henry Fuseli (1741–1825), a Swiss painter of historical subjects. He lived in England.

1. 18. Shadwell. Thomas Shadwell (1642?–1692), was the author of several dramas, and was satirized by Dryden in Macflecknoe.

1. 18. Homer is reputed, etc. On the strength of the lines quoted in the note to p. 72, l. 20.

Page 134, line 4. the last Lord Orford. Better known as Horace Walpole (1717–1797), author of The Castle of Otranto, (1746) and Letters.

1. 9. though. The original text reads thought — a manifest misprint.

Page 135, line 11. The causes of my horror, etc. Compare R. L. Stevenson, Across the Plains (Despised Races).

Page 136, line 11. officina gentium. “Workshop of the nations.”

Page 137, lines 12–13. Brama . . . Vishnu . . . Seeva. The creative energy, the preserving power, and the destructive power, respectively, of the Brahmanic religion.

1. 14. Isis and Osiris. In the Egyptian religion Isis is the wife and feminine counterpart of Osiris, who is the good principle, identified with the vivifying power of the sun and of the waters of the Nile.

Page 139, line 14. cæteris paribus. "Other things being equal."

Page 141, line 11. a child whom I had tenderly loved.
Little Kate Wordsworth.

l. 17. first fruits of resurrection. From I Corinthians xv. 20, a verse which occurs both in the Easter Anthem and in the Lesson in the Order for the Burial of the Dead of the Church of England: "Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the first-fruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming."

l. 18. I will walk abroad . . . unhappy no longer. Compare Tennyson, In Memoriam, LXXXVI: —

"Sweet after showers, ambrosial air,
That rollest from the gorgeous gloom
Of evening over break and bloom
And meadow, slowly breathing bare

The round of space, and wrapt below
Thro' all the dewy-tassell'd wood,
And shadowing down the horned flood
In ripples, fan my brows and blow

The fever from my cheek, and sigh
The full new life that feeds thy breath
Throughout my frame, till Doubt and Death,
Ill brethren, let the fancy fly

From belt to belt of crimson seas
 On leagues of odour streaming far,
 To where in yonder orient star
 A hundred spirits whisper 'Peace.' "

Page 142, line 9. shaded by Judean palms. Suggested by a figure seen on Roman coins. Works, I., 54.

l. 18. the tears were now wiped away. "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." — Revelation vii. 17, and xxi. 4. See also Isaiah xxv. 8.

Page 143, line 6. final specimen. With this "final specimen" compare Dream Fugue, in The English Mail Coach, Secs. iv. and v.

l. 11. Coronation Anthem. The Coronation Anthem was written in 1727, by George Frederick Handel (1685–1759), for performance at the coronation ceremony of George II., in Westminster Abbey, October 11, 1727.

Page 144, line 4. Deeper than ever plummet sounded. "I'll seek him deeper than e'er plummet sounded." — SHAKESPEARE, Tempest, III., iii., 101.

l. 16. and with a sigh . . . death. The reference is to the speech of Sin, an "incestuous mother," because she, the daughter of Satan, bore to him Death, and because to Death she also bore "yelling monsters." — MILTON, Paradise Lost, II., 648–814.

"I fled and cried out Death!
 Hell trembled at the hideous name, and sighed
 From all her caves, and back resounded Death!" —ll. 787–789.

1. 22. I will sleep no more. See note to p. 68, l. 10.

Page 147, line 15. a most innocent sufferer. "William Lithgow (1582-1645?): His book (Travels, &c.) is ill and pedantically written: but the account of his own sufferings on the rack at Malaga is overpoweringly affecting." — De Quincey's Note. The title is The Totall Discourse of the Rare Adventures and painfull Peregrinations of long Nineteene Yeares (1632).

Page 148, line 16. Lord Bacon conjectures. "Essay on Death: 'It is as natural to die as to be born; and to a little infant perhaps the one is as painful as the other.'" — De Quincey's Note (ed. 1856). The text of the London Magazine reads Jeremy Taylor.

Page 149, line 9. With dreadful faces, etc. Milton, Paradise Lost, XII., 644.

Page 151, lines 1-13. The interest . . . extraordinary history. These lines are an editorial note in the London Magazine, explaining the Appendix. See Editor's Introduction to the present edition.

Page 153, line 14. fiat experimentum, etc. "Let the experiment be made upon a worthless object."

Page 158, line 2. Beaumont and Fletcher. Francis Beaumont (1584-1616) and John Fletcher (1579-1625) wrote dramas in conjunction. Thierry and Theodoret was printed in 1621. The passage referred to is as follows: —

“(THIERRY is brought in on a couch, with DOCTORS and ATTENDANTS.)

“Thierry. Tell me,
 Can ever these eyes more, shut up in slumbers,
 Assure my soul there is sleep? is there night
 And rest for human labours? do not you
 And all the world, as I do, out-stare Time,
 And live, like funeral lamps, never extinguished?
 Is there a grave (and do not flatter me, Nor fear to tell the truth), and in that grave
 Is there a hope I shall sleep? can I die?
 Are not my miseries immortal? Oh,
 The happiness of him that drinks his water,
 After his weary day, and sleeps forever!
 Why do you crucify me thus with faces,
 And gaping strangely upon one another!

* * * * *

The eyes of Heaven

See but their certain motions, and then sleep:
 The rages of the Ocean have their slumbers
 And quiet silver calms; each violence
 Crowns in his end a peace; but my fixed fires Shall never, never set!” — V., ii.

l. 9. the old fable. The familiar fairy tale, The Sleeping Beauty in the Wood, which Tennyson has beautifully treated in his Day Dream.

l. 15. I nunc, et versus tecum, etc. “Go now, and meditate harmonious verses.” — HORACE (B.C. 65–8), Epistles, II., ii, 76. The i nunc is an ironical imperative to do something impossible or difficult.

Page 160, line 3. infandum renovare dolorem. “Infandum, regina, jubes renovare dolorem.” “O queen, thou dost command me to revive an unutterable grief!”—VIRGIL (B.C. 70–19), Æneid, II., 3. An excellent example of De Quincey’s many felicitous literary allusions.

Page 162, line 12. pretty rapid course of descent. “On which last notice I would remark, that mine was too rapid, and the suffering therefore needlessly aggravated: or rather, perhaps, it was not sufficiently continuous and equably graduated.”—De Quincey’s Note (extract).

Page 163, line 4. so rascally a subject. Rascally is a Shakespearean word, meaning “base.”

l. 9. heautontimoroumenos. “Self-tormentor,” the name of Terence’s play quoted on p. 9, l. 5.

Page 164, line 16. Golgothas. St. Matthew xxvii. 33.

Page 165, line 8. Roman prince. Caligula (A.D. 14–41).

l. 16. Suetonius. Gaius Suetonius Tranquillus, a Roman historian and scholar, born about A.D. 70. He wrote Vitæ Duodecim Cæsarum (Lives of the First Twelve Roman Emperors). The reference is to his life of C. Cæsar Caligula, 38, where the words “vivere perseverarent” occur.

INDEX TO NOTES

- Achilles at the Siege of Troy*, 188.
 Addington, Mr., 169.
 Adelung, 194.
 Æschylus, 175.
à force d'ennuyer, 193.
alalagmos, 199.
 Alcæus, 176.
 Alcaics, 176.
 a-muck, 194.
 Andromache, 188.
Anastasius, 187-188, 193.
à parte ante, 195-196.
à parte post, 195-196.
à priori, 198.
Archididasculus, 172.
 Athenæus, 186.
 Aurora, 196.
 Awsiter, 169.

 Bacon, Lord, quotation, 203.
 Baird Smith, Mrs., 198.
 Beaumont and Fletcher, quotation, 203-204.
 Behmenism, 191.
bellum internecinum, 195.
 Bible quotation, 1 Corinthians xv. 20 ff., 201.
 — 1 Corinthians xv. 43, 192.
 — Psalm lv. 6, 183.
 — Revelation vii. 17, 202.
 — Revelation xiv. 13, 190, 191.
 — Revelation xxi. 4, 202.
 — 2 Samuel xii. 7, 197.
 — reference, Isaiah xxv. 8, 202.
 — Luke vii. 8, 198, 36-50, 182.
 — Luke xvi. 26, 194.
 — Matthew viii. 9, 198.
 — Matthew xxvii. 33, 205.
 — Revelation xx. 12, 198.
 Blue-beard, 177.
 Bodleian, 192.
 Brama, 200.
 Browne, Sir T., 189.
 Browning, R., 189.
 Buchan's Domestic Medicine, 186.
 Burke, quotation, 167.

cæteris paribus, 201.
 Caligula, 205.
 Carbery, Lady, 172.
 Carlisle, Dean of. (See Milner, Isaac.) categories, Aristotle's ten, 196.
 Chaucer, quotation, 180, 194.
 Cicero, quotation, 195, 196.
 Cimarosa, 188.

- Circe, 198.
 Clarkson, Thomas, 195.
 Coleridge, S. T., 169, 170, 195.
 — and opium, 167.
 — his poems and The Confessions, 169.
contretens, 174.
Coronation Anthem, 202.
 Cromwell, 176.
Custos Rotulorum, 193.
 “Dash, Mr., the philosopher,” 168.
 Death, Raleigh’s apostrophe to, 191.
Δειπνοσοφισταί, 186–187.
 De Quincey, Thomas, Medical view of his case, 171, 193.
 — at Bath School, 171.
 — at Winkfield School, 171.
 — at Manchester School, 171.
 — Chronology of the Confessions, 177–178.
 — his father’s name, 179.
 — his father an author, 181.
 — his mother’s letters, 181.
 — marries Margaret Simpson, 184.
 Dickens, reference, 177, 179.
 Doctor’s Commons, 179.
 Dryden, 200.
 Du Maurier, 189.
 Eatwell, Dr., 171.
Ecclesiasticus, quotation, 169.
 Eclectic philosopher, 194.
 Electra, 183–185.
 epigrams, Greek, 172, 192.
 Erskine, Lord, and opium, 168.
étourderie, 175.
 Endæmonist, 193.
 Eumenides, 184.
 Euripides, 175.
 — quotation, 183, 184.
 — reference, 183, 184 bis, 184–185.
 evanesced, 185.
ex cathedra, 186.
 exhibition, 188.
fiat experimentum in corpore vili, 203.
 Fichte, 192–193.
 Flatman, 185.
 Fletcher (see Beaumont).
formaliter, 179.
 friezes, 198.
 Fuseli, 200.
 Goethe, 167.
 Goldsmith, 195.
 Golgothas, 205.
 Graces, 171–172.
 Grassini, 188.
 Gray, reference, 169, 198.
 Handel, 202.
 Hanway, 195.
 Hazlitt, 170.
Heautontimoroumenos, 170, 205.

- Hebe, 196.
 Hector, 188.
 Hekatómpylos, 192.
Henry VIII., quotation, 171, 196.
 Homer, and opium, 200.
 — quotation, 186.
honi soit qui mal y pense, 193.
 Hope, Thomas, 188.
 Horace, quotation, 196, 204.
Humani nihil a se alienum putat,
 170.

Ibi omnis effusus labor, 181.
 Iliad of woes, 196.
infandum renovare dolorem, 205.
in medias res, 196.
i nunc et versus tecum, etc., 204.
 Isis, 200.

 Johnson, Dr., 177, 195.
 — quotation, 172-173.
 Juvenal, quotation, 180.

 Kant, 192-193.
 Keats, quotation, 191.
 — reference, 196.
 Kemble, 196.
 Kipling, reference, 188.

 Lawson, Mr., 171, 173.
 laying down, 177.
 Lithgow, 203.
 Livy, 199.

 Magdalen, 182.
Mail Coach, The, reference, 180, 202.
 Margaret (Simpson), 184.
 Marinus, 190.
 Marius, Gaius, 199.
materialiter, 179.
 Mead, 169.
 Memphis, 198.
meo periculo, 186.
 Milner, Isaac, 168.
 Milton, quotation, Il Penseroso, 199.
 — Paradise Lost, 174, 175 bis, 177, 178, 202, 203.
 — Paradise Regained, 180.
 — reference, Comus, 186.
 — Il Penseroso, 186.
 — L'Allegro, 186.
 — Paradise Lost, 202.
 — Paradise Regained, 197.
 — Samson Agonistes, 197.
Mithridates, 194.
 Montague, M. W., 181.
more Socratico, 178.
 Morgan, Mr., 171.
 music, in praise of, 189.
 mysticism, 190-191.

noli me tangere, 176.
νυχθημερον, 194.

 Oedipus, 198.
officina gentium, 200.
οι πολλοι, 176.

- Orford, Lord, 200.
 Osiris, 200.
 Otway, 182.
 Ovid, quotation, 186.
- pandiculation, 193.
 Pantheon, 185.
 Parnell, 169.
 Paulus, Lucius, 199.
Pervigilium Veneris, quotation, 169.
 φαρμακον νήπενθες, 186.
 Phidias, 192.
 φωναντα συνετοισι, 169.
 Pindar, 169.
 Piozzi, Mrs., 177.
 Piranesi, 199.
 Plato, 189.
 Pote's, 180.
ponderibus librata suis, 186.
 Praxiteles, 192.
 Priam, 198.
primâ facie, 188.
 Proclus, 190.
- quietism, 191.
 Quincey, Thomas, 179.
- Raleigh, Sir Walter, quotation, 191.
 rascally, 205.
 Ricardo, 170, 198.
 Rossetti, D. G., reference, 189.
 Rousseau, 167.
- St. Thomas' Day, 195.
 Salisbury plain, 174.
 Sapphics, 176.
 Sappho, 176.
 Saracen's head, 182.
 Schelling, 192-193.
 Seeva, 200.
 Seven Sleepers, The, 174.
 Shadwell, and opium, 200.
 Shakespeare, quotation, Antony and Cleopatra, 180.
 — As You Like It, 182.
 — King John, 180.
 — Macbeth, 184.
 — Tempest, 202.
 — Twelfth Night, 188-189.
 — reference, Hamlet, 197.
 Shelley, quotation, Revolt of Islam, 196.
 — To a Skylark, 174.
 — reference, Revolt of Islam, 176.
 Siddons, 197.
sine Cerere et Libero friget Venus, 178.
 sleep, addresses to, Shakespeare, 184.
 — Euripides, 183.
 — Beaumont and Fletcher, 204.
 Socrates, 178.
 soliciting, 179.
 soot, honey from, 190.
 Sophocles, 172, 175.
 Southey, quotation, 195.
 Spanish bridge, 197.

- Spencer, Edward, 171.
 Spinosa, 197.
 Stevenson, R. L., quotation, 178-179.
 — reference, 200.
 stoic philosophy, 193-194.
 Suetonius, 205.
 Swinburne, quotation, 176.
 — reference, 196.
- Tartarus, 177.
 Tennyson, quotation, 176, 201.
 — reference, 204.
 Terence, quotation, 170, 178.
 — reference, 205.
terræ incognitæ, 190.
 Thebes, 198.
Thierry and Theodoret, 203.
 Thomson, James, quotation, 195.
 Trophonius, Cave of, 190.
 Tyre, 198.
- Vane, Sir Henry, 191.
 Virgil, quotation, Georgics, 181.
 — Aeneid, 205.
 Vishnu, 200.
- Walpole, Horace, 200.
 Weld, 189.
 Whitman, Walt, 178.
 Wilberforce, and opium, 168.
 Wilson, John, 171.
 Wordsworth, Dorothy, 197.
 Wordsworth, Kate, 193, 201.
 Wordsworth, William, 175, 183.
 — quotation, Daffodils, 170.
 — Excursion, 192 bis, 199.
 — Highland Girl, 199.
 — Immortality (Ode on), 178, 199.
 — Power of Music, 185.
 — Resolution and Independence, 194.
 — She was a Phantom, 178.
 — Sonnet, "Nuns Fret Not," 173.
 — White Doe of Rylstone, 167, 192.
 — reference, The Prelude, 173.
 — attracts De Quincey to the north, 175, 182.
- X. Y. Z., 193.

COLLEGE ENTRANCE REQUIREMENTS IN ENGLISH.

For 1900, 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905.

Official List.

REQUIRED FOR CAREFUL STUDY.

Burke's Speech on Conciliation with America	1900	1901	1902	1903	1904	1905
Macaulay's Essays on Milton and Addison	1900	1901	1902	1903	1904	1905
Milton's Minor Poems		1901	1902	1903	1904	1905
Milton's Paradise Lost, Books I. and II.	1900
Shakespeare's Macbeth	1900	1901	1902	1903	1904	1905

REQUIRED FOR GENERAL READING.

Addison's The Sir Roger de Coverley Papers	1900	1901	1902	1903	1904	1905
Carlyle's Essay on Burns				1903	1904	1905
Coleridge's The Ancient Mariner		1901	1902	1903	1904	1905
Cooper's The Last of the Mohi- cans	1900	1901	1902
De Quincey's The Flight of a Tartar Tribe	1900
Dryden's Palamon and Arcite	1900
Eliot's Silas Marner		1901	1902	1903	1904	1905
Goldsmith's The Vicar of Wake- field	1900	1901	1902	1903	1904	1905
Lowell's The Vision of Sir Laun- fal	1900			1903	1904	1905
Pope's Iliad, Books I., VI., XXII., and XXIV.	1900	1901	1902
Scott's Ivanhoe	1900	1901	1902	1903	1904	1905
Shakespeare's The Merchant of Venice		1901	1902	1903	1904	1905
Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar				1903	1904	1905
Tennyson's The Princess	1900	1901	1902	1903	1904	1905

MACMILLAN'S

POCKET SERIES OF ENGLISH CLASSICS

UNIFORM IN SIZE AND BINDING

Levanteen - - 25 Cents Each

Comments

Emily I. Meader, Classical High School, Providence, R. I.

"The samples of new English Classics meet a need I have felt in regard to the school editions of the classics. These books are artistic in make-up, as well as cheap. The clothes of our books, as of our friends, influence our enjoyment of their blessings. It has seemed to me incongruous to try to establish and cultivate a taste for good literature, which is essentially and delightfully diverse, when that literature is bound in uniform drab cloth."

Mary F. Hendrick, Normal School, Cortlandt, N. Y.

"Your English Classics Series is a little gem. It is cheap, durably bound, excellent type and paper, and especially well adapted for students' work, as the notes are to the point and not burdensome."

Mary C. Lovejoy, Central High School, Buffalo, N. Y.

"I think you have provided such an attractive help for students that they will be incited to add to their collection of books."

Professor L. L. Sprague, Wyoming Seminary, Kingston, Pa.

"The 'Essay on Milton' and 'Essay on Addison' are exceedingly well edited, and in beauty of type and binding are not surpassed by similar works of any other publishing house."

B. W. Hutchinson, Genesee Wesleyan Seminary, Lima, N. Y.

"I am in receipt of French's 'Macaulay's Essay on Milton,' and am delighted with the book. The publisher's part of the work deserves special mention as being exceptionally good, while the editor's task appears to be done in first-class taste throughout."

Superintendent J. C. Simpson, Portsmouth, N. H.

"I congratulate you upon your happy combination of an artistic and scholarly book with a price that makes it easily available."

T. C. Blaisdell, Fifth Avenue Normal School, Pittsburg, Pa.

"I wish to thank you for a copy of 'The Princess,' in your Pocket Series. I have examined the volume with pleasure. The introduction is excellent, the brief treatment of Tennyson's Work and Art being especially interesting and helpful. The notes at times seem to explain the obvious; in a book for young students, however, that is the safe side to err on. The editing, the clear type, the dainty binding, and the 'pocket' size combine to make the book one that will be a pleasure to the student."

Superintendent Wm. E. Chancellor, Bloomfield, N. J.

"I have read from cover to cover the edition of 'Macaulay's Essay on Addison,' by Principal French, of Hyde Park High School, Chicago, and find the edition all that can be desired. The several introductions are, from my point of view, exactly what they ought to be. The notes seem to me particularly wise and helpful. Your edition is not only the best at its price, but it is better than every other which I have seen, and I have taken great pains to inform myself regarding all editions of English Classics for schools."

Francis A. Bagnall, Principal High School, St. Albans, Vt.

"They appeal to me as combining convenience and attractiveness of form and excellence of contents."

B. A. Heydrick, State Normal School, Millersville, Pa.

"I know of no edition that can compare with yours in attractiveness and cheapness. So far as I have examined it the editor's work has been judiciously performed. But well-edited texts are easy to find: you have done something new in giving us a beautiful book, one that will teach pupils to love and care for books; and, which seems to me quite as important, you have made an edition which does not look 'school-booky.'"

Eliza M. Bullock, Principal Girls' High School, Montgomery, Ala.

"I think your books of the Pocket Series of English Classics the best I have seen, the most complete in every way. I am enthusiastic about the delightful volumes I have seen."

C. E. E. Mosher, Preparatory School, New Bedford, Mass.

"Their outward form and dress are a pleasure to the eye, while their inward matter and arrangement are a source of delight to the mind."

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY

66 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

Works by Prof. E. H. LEWIS

Of Lewis Institute and the University of Chicago

A First Book in Writing English

12mo. Buckram. Price 80 cents

Albert H. Smyth, Central High School, Philadelphia.

"I have read it carefully and am much pleased with the way the work has been done. It is careful, thoughtful, and clearly arranged. The quotations are apt and judiciously selected. It is the best book of its size and scope that I am acquainted with."

Sarah V. Chollar, State Normal School, Potsdam, N. Y.

"The author has made an admirable selection of topics for treatment in this book, and has presented them in a way that cannot fail to be helpful to teachers who have classes doing this grade of work."

An Introduction to the Study of Literature

For the use of Secondary and Graded Schools.

12mo. Cloth. Price $1.00

This book is a collection of short masterpieces of modern literature arranged in groups, each group interpreting some one phase of adolescent interest, e.g., "The Athlete;" "The Heroism of War;" "The Heroism of Peace;" "The Adventurer;" "The Far Goal;" "The Morning Landscape;" "The Gentleman;" "The Hearth." A chronological table is given at the end of the book, by centuries and half centuries, showing at what age each author began to publish, and the name and date of his first book. The selections together form an anthology of English prose and verse, but it is more than an ordinary anthology; it is constructed so as to be of value not only to the scholar but also to the teacher and general reader. Each section is opened with a critical introduction which will serve as a guide both to teacher and student.

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY

66 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

From Chaucer to Arnold

Types of Literary Art in Prose and Verse. An Introduction to English Literature, with Preface and Notes. By ANDREW J. GEORGE, A.M., Department of English, High School, Newton, Mass.

Cloth. 8vo. Price $1.00

Albert H. Smyth, Central High School, Philadelphia.

"In George's 'Chaucer to Arnold' I recognize many favorites and think the editing and the annotation remarkably well done; the notes are sufficiently brief and clear, the bibliography judicious, and a fine spirit of appreciation is shown."

Principles of English Grammar

For the use of Schools. By GEORGE R. CARPENTER, Professor of Rhetoric and English Composition in Columbia University.

12mo. Half-Leather. Price 75 cents

Professor Fred W. Reynolds, University of Utah.

"For a straightforward discussion of the principles of grammar, the book is among the best I have ever seen."

American Prose Selections

With Critical Introductions by Various Writers and a General Introduction edited by GEORGE RICE CARPENTER, Columbia University.

12mo. Cloth. Price $1.00

F. A. Voght, Principal Central High School, Buffalo.

"It is a pleasure to take up so handsome a volume. The selections are most admirable and the character sketches of authors are bright, chatty, clear, and concise."

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY

66 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

E.H

MAY 3 1940

f

Deacidified using the Bookkeeper process
Neutralizing agent: Magnesium Oxide Treatment Date: March 2009

PreservationTechnologies

A WORLD LEADER IN COLLECTIONS PRESERVATION

111 Thomson Park Drive
Cranberry Township, PA 16066
(724) 779-2111

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

0 014 456 272 0

